Nation-Wide Strike Warns New French Government

Business Is at Standstill as Million Workers Join Walkout.

Gesture Is Aimed At Dictatorship

Troops Brought to Paris; Anti-Fascists Stage Demonstrations.

Paris, Feb. 11 (AP).—A nation-wide general strike against "Fascist reaction" began at midnight tonight, with 1,000,000 workers ordered to stay idle for 24 hours, stopping virtually all activity in France.

The strike was a warning to the government of Premier Gaston Doumergue against the adoption of dictatorial methods. It was anticipated to be the biggest in scope since the strike of 1919.

The start of the strike found most of France asleep after a day of National anti-Fascist demonstrations by Socialists and Communists, but the walkout was expected to make its effects felt soon after daybreak.

More than 100,000 workers in the Paris region alone were called out. The tie-up in city transportation threatened to prevent nonstriking workers from reaching their offices and factories, which have been ordered picketed by strike leaders.

Troops Man Utilities.

Effects of the stoppage of work remained doubtful. For one thing, the government was prepared for it, having brought to Paris squads of soldiers and sailors from the army and navy technical corps to keep public utilities running by operating telephone and telegraph lines and manning gas, electric and water plants.

Also, it was indicated authoritatively today that Doumergue's "political truce" cabinet was likely to seek emergency powers and then send Parliament home for several months.

Doumergue remained at his desk throughout the day, striving to calm the country, but issued no official word concerning the strike.

Business Stops.

Indications pointed to an almost complete shutdown of business and industry in Paris and throughout the country. Food shops were to remain open, but the people faced going without mail, newspapers, theaters and possibly telephone and telegraph facilities for the duration of the strike.

Railroads were expected to continue operation. Subway bus and street car employes joined the strike. Paris already was without taxi service. It was the twelfth day of a drivers' strike in protest against a gasoline tax.

Teachers announced they were

Lopez Is Declared Victor in Colombia

Liberal Leader Conceded Presidency.

Bogota, Colombia, Feb. 11 (AP).—Alfonso Lopez, Liberal leader, who favors a peaceful solution of the Leticia controversy with Peru, today, was conceded to have been elected President of Colombia in nation-wide elections.

His only opponent was an Indian farmer, Estiquio Timote, the Communist candidate.

If the count of ballots confirms his anticipated victory, Lopez will be inaugurated August 7 for a four-year term, succeeding his fellow Liberal, Dr. Enrique Olaya Herrera. Conservatives officially abstained from today's balloting.

Troops Quell Two Riots in Ireland

Use Tear Gas to Scotch Political Outbreak.

Dublin, Irish Free State, Feb. 11 (AP).—Armed troops, equipped with tear gas, were dispatched from here today to quell political disturbances at Drogheda and Dundalk.

At Drogheda soldiers were forced to send waves of gas billowing across a political forum where crowds were storming police with rocks. Several persons were injured, none seriously.

Police broke up a crowd at Dundalk, which had interrupted William T. Cosgrove, United Ireland party leader.

Two Armed Men Slain in Night Club

Kansas City, Feb. 11 (AP).—Two men were shot and killed in a night club here shortly after noon today and police arrested the owner, Edward Nettles, for questioning.

John Curtin, said by police to have operated a dice game in the club, and John Norris, a former part owner of the place, were killed. Both were shot in the head.

Officers said Nettles refused to make a statement other than to deny he killed the two men, both of whom were armed.

The New Dealers

—The Low Down on the Higher Ups—

'Roosevelt Leads by Following'

Lends an Ear to All, Then Evolves a Composite Method of Action.

Roosevelt is essentially a broker. He has neither the will nor the power to move against the political currents of the day. He does not and can not invent his policies. Instead, he listens to everyone and reduces what he has heard to an action calculated to represent the public will. There is no man who enjoys his exclusive confidence. The usual attempt to "air-condition" the President, by surrounding him with an impermeable wall of men and ideas, has failed. The doors of the White House are wide open. The President does not engage in stodgy hand-shakings or baby-kissings, but the wildest radical in America can win a hearing for his ideas just as well as the most powerful banker.

The only condition is that whoever desires a hearing must adopt the political method. The old avenues of special pleading, special influence and special consideration are blocked. Roosevelt wants public discussion, public criticism, public agitation. He likes people to start things, politically. Once they are started, he can weave them into the pattern of National politics. He has no use for a nation of yes-men and has been seriously handicapped by the pathetic "loyalty" of the press in refraining from real criticism and real opposition to the New Deal.

His circle of advisers is constantly shifting. At one time it was Prof. Moley, at another Henry Morgenthau, jr., who was supposed to have the inside track. The fact is that, as the basis of political action shifts, those men who are most concerned with the immediate problems of the day achieve a temporary prominence.

Americans have discovered that the only way to win attention, out of their turn, is to make their existence an immediate problem for the White House.

Roosevelt welcomes political action, agitation and discussion. A

Gen. Johnson, Modern Diogenes of the NRA.

State NRA Laws Asked By Johnson

Administrator Submits "Model" Act to Governors.

Would Bolster National Statute, Shaken by Court Tests.

(Associated Press.)

The National Recovery Administration, faced with a growing enforcement problem under codes covering purely local enterprises, yesterday urged the 48 States to enact statutes making code violations a breach of State laws.

Without admitting there actually is a limitation on the Federal enforcing power, Hugh S. Johnson yesterday made public a "model" State industrial recovery act which has been submitted to governors together with a diplomatically worded letter pointing out that NRA is "deeply interested" in the passage of measures for cooperation with the Federal law and for elimination of conflicts.

Just how far the proposal could be advanced this year is not clear. Relatively few States have regular sessions of legislatures in the even numbered years and while special sessions were set for in the even in sessions were set for this year in several, some of these already have been held.

12 States Have NRA Laws.

Twelve States to date have enacted NRA cooperative legislation: New York, New Jersey, Virginia, Ohio, Texas, California, Utah, Colorado, Wisconsin, Kansas, Massachusetts and Washington. West Virginia was listed by NRA yesterday as having such a bill through its House and pending before the Senate.

Though Johnson's idea looks toward the eventual continuance of codes past the emergency period the present proposal is purely an emergency plan worded to expire with the Federal industrial act, using as a preamble a declaration of State-wide emergency similar in nature to the Congressional declaration on which the National Industrial Recovery Act is founded.

The immediate problem which calls for State assistance is twofold: A number of Federal judges hearing the relatively few cases so far in court have declared Congress can not delegate power to regulate business which is not interstate. Machinery for 100 per cent Federal enforcement might prove as cumbersome as prohibition enforcement, in the opinion of NRA officials.

Enforcement Needed.

Serious enforcement work, however, must be under way soon, these officials say, if the codes are to have lasting value. Declarations of officials that the stores and offices of the country must be looked to for a large share of reemployment show the noninterstate business must remain under codes if NRA's recovery objective is to be attained.

None of the very few lower court decisions against NRA has as yet been upheld on appeal, and virtually all have turned on side issues, but some of the officials have indicated privately that they are not too optimistic over their chances of having courts uphold the right to impose code terms on very small, local enterprises, despite the neces-

$200,000 Damage In Lynchburg Fire

All-Night Battle in Frigid Weather Conquers Blaze.

Lynchburg, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Firemen fought a blaze in the McGehee Furniture Store, Montgomery Ward & Co. store, and a vacant building in the 900 block of Main street until 8 a. m. today, the entire force remaining at the blaze in temperatures which ranged down to 9 degrees during the night. Firemen's uniforms were frozen when they conquered the blaze.

The damage is estimated at upward of $200,000, fully covered by insurance. Stocks of the Montgomery Ward Co. and the McGehee company are practically a total loss.

The fire was discovered at 9:20 o'clock last night and it was not under control until 2 a. m.

Wife of Insull, Jr., Dies in Chicago

Death Comes Suddenly After Operation.

Chicago, Feb. 11 (AP).—Mrs. Samuel Insull, jr., 36, daughter-in-law of the former utilities magnate, died today following an operation Thursday at St. Luke's Hospital for pyelitis.

A blood clot formed from the site of the operation and carried to the lungs and caused death inside half an hour.

Her husband was at her bedside.

In addition to her husband, Mrs. Insull is survived by her son, Samuel Insull III, 2; a sister, Mrs. Robert McCreary, of Lake Forest, Ill., and a half brother, Charles I. Pierce, jr., of Chicago.

Contract Cancellation Is a Hard Blow, He Wires President.

Fairness Demands Hearing, He Says

Protests Innocent Lines Treated as Guilty Without Trial.

New York, Feb. 11 (AP).—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh tonight telegraphed President Roosevelt that "the condemnation of commercial aviation by cancellation of all air mail contracts and the use of the Army on commercial air lines will unnecessarily and greatly damage all American aviation."

The telegram added that "your order of cancellation of all air mail contracts condemns the largest portion of our commercial aviation without a just trial," and "your present action does not discriminate between innocence and guilt and places no premium on honest business."

The telegram was made public by Col. Henry Breckinbridge, Lindbergh's attorney, at the former's office.

Lindbergh Not Present.

Col. Lindbergh, who is technical adviser to Transcontinental & Western Air, one of the companies whose air-mail contracts was canceled, was not present.

The text of Col. Lindbergh's telegram follows:

"The President, White House, Washington, D. C.

"Your action of yesterday affects fundamentally the industry to which I have devoted the last 12 years of my life. Therefore, I respectfully present to you the following consideration:

"The personal and business lives of American citizens have been built up around the right of just trial before conviction. Your order of cancellation of all air-mail contracts condemns the largest portion of our commercial aviation without just trial.

"The officers of a number of the organizations affected have not been given the opportunity to a hearing and improper acts by many companies affected have not been established.

"No one can rightfully object to drastic action being taken provided the guilt implied is first established but it is the right of any American individual or organization to receive fair trial.

"No Premium on Honesty."

"Your present action does not discriminate between innocence and guilt and places no premium on honest business.

"Americans have set their lives in building in this country the finest commercial air lines in the world. The United States today are in the lead in almost every branch of commercial aviation.

"In America we have commercial aircraft, engines, equipment and air lines superior to those of any other country. The greatest part of this progress has been brought about through the air mail. Certainly most individuals in the industry believe that this development has been carried on in cooperation with the existing Government and according to law.

"If this is not the case, it seems the right of the industry and in keeping with American tradition that facts to the contrary be definitely established. Unless these facts leave no alternative, condemnation of commercial aviation by cancellation of all air-mail contracts and the use of the Army on commercial air lines will unnecessarily and greatly damage all American aviation.

"CHARLES A. LINDBERGH."

Air Races Postponed.

New Orleans, Feb. 11 (AP).—Due to inclement weather, the Pan-American air races at the New Orleans airport, a major feature of the carnival season, were postponed today until Wednesday.

Uncle John Shows His Wares, Later Action Not Bared

Evanston, Ill., Feb. 11 (U.P.).—Four-year-old Howard Styles wanted to prove to his playmate, John Stevens, that his uncle, Capt. John Wynn, of the Evanston Fire Department, was the world's best firefighter.

In an effort to prove his argument by deeds rather than words, Howard set fire to the curtains in an unstairs bedroom, then screamed for "Uncle John" to come prove his ability.

"Uncle John" extinguished the fire quickly and single-handed, to the great satisfaction of Howard, but in addition to the curtains, the family's losses included one chair and a dresser.

White House Extends War On Lobbyists

3 Generals Testify Today; Grand Jury Seeks New "Inside Influence."

The Administration's sweeping drive against political lawyers, lobbyists and go-betweens, which has inspired current Senate and House investigations and has led to cancelation of air-mail contracts and suspension of the War Department's $10,000,000 motorization program, promises to keep the Federal grand jury in session for at least another week before its report on alleged irregularities can be made to the District Supreme Court.

President Roosevelt's announced determination to stamp out practices of those claiming "inside influence" at Washington led yesterday to extension of the scope of the jury's inquiries.

Assistant United States Attorney David A. Pine, who is conducting the grand jury proceedings, today will question Gen. Douglas MacArthur, chief of staff of the Army; Maj. Gen. Robert E. Callan, who directly supervises procurement of Army supplies, and Maj. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, of the general staff.

Woodring to Appear Again.

These three officers, representing the Army's high command, have agreed to appear voluntarily before the grand jury, and none of them, naturally, is involved in the sensational allegations. Assistant Secretary of War Harry H. Woodring, whose office recently took over all matters pertaining to Army contracts, will appear again for further questioning later this week.

The decision to invite Gen. MacArthur and his assistants on the general staff to appear before the grand jury came in response to direct orders from the White House that no stone be left unturned in tracking down and rooting out lobbyists who have been representing themselves as go-betweens in the New Deal.

Following the appearance of the general staff officers today, the jury's inquiry is expected to turn again to conferences at a leading Washington hotel at which propositions involving alleged influence with Government departments are understood to have been advanced by a group of civilians now under suspicion.

Other Army Items Questioned.

The propositions under fire were made to automobile manufacturers, according to information unearthed by Government investigators, and Three Hurt in Crash.

Santa Ana, Calif., Feb. 11 (AP).—Aram Glorig, jr., 27; his mother, Mrs. Beatrice Glorig, wife of Dr. Aram Glorig, of West Palm Beach, Fla., and Miss Myrtle Anderson, 27, Loma Linda resident, were injured seriously today in a motor car crash near San Juan Capistrano.

Jurney Takes 'Prisoner' for Walk, Leaps Into Car and Escapes.

Show-Down Due In Court Today

Hogan Insists His Client Has Beaten Air Mail Probers' Strategy.

By Felix Bruner.

William P. MacCracken was a free man last night. He was free because his jailer, Chesley Jurney, Senate sergeant at arms, escaped from him.

MacCracken will appear in the District Supreme Court today, contending that he was arrested on a charge of contempt of the Senate and freed on a writ of habeas corpus.

Jurney will appear and contend that MacCracken never was arrested, that he was simply an unwelcome overnight guest at the Jurney apartment.

MacCracken's attorney, Frank J. Hogan, will ask that the court dismiss the request for a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that the writ having been served and the prisoner freed, the purpose for which it had been asked had been accomplished.

Comic, Yet Well Planned.

On the surface, the whole affair was a comedy. Actually it constituted a series of well-laid plans, designed by the Senate to keep the affair out of the courts and by MacCracken to get it into court. To all appearances, MacCracken has won the first round.

MacCracken, having appeared at Jurney's apartment in the Methodist Building Saturday night, demanding to be arrested, stayed all night. The "prisoner," former Assistant Secretary of Commerce in charge of aviation, was charged by the Senate with contempt because of removal of air mail records demanded by the Senate.

MacCracken spent Saturday night in the only bedroom in the Jurney apartment. Jurney slept on a davenport. They had breakfast together yesterday morning.

Then the Comedy Starts.

Then they went for a walk. Hogan declared Jurney "ordered" MacCracken to accompany him. The walk led to the Senate Office Building and to Jurney's office. There Jurney "ordered" or "asked," depending on who is relating the story, MacCracken to wait for him in the office. Jurney left his hat

Traylor Sinks; Death Feared

New Type of Pneumonia, Often Fatal Quickly, Attacks Banker.

Chicago, Feb. 11 (AP).—Physicians attending Melvin H. Traylor, ill of pneumonia, tonight described the banker's condition as "grave."

Traylor late last night suffered his most serious relapse since his illness and physicians hurriedly placed him under an oxygen tent again.

"If his heart holds out, he may have a chance," Dr. William R. Cubbins, spokesman for five physicians attending the banker, said today.

Dr. Cubbins said that the type of pneumonia had taken a sudden change and that Friedlander's bacillus, fatal quickly in many cases, was present. The family was called to the bedside last night.

The new crisis was the sixth Traylor has undergone. His temperature went up to 104, but dropped back to 102.3 today.

"At midnight," Dr. Cubbins said, "he almost died. We could not tell from minute to minute how long he would survive. Yet he does. His constitution is remarkable."

Dr. Cubbins expressed the opinion that "we are fighting in the dark" so far as Friedlander's bacillus was concerned.

"We know so little about the bacillus that anything can happen. It is absolutely incredible to us how he can improve when everything indicates the end has come."

Capital's Ice Coat Covered by Snow

Warmer and Fair Weather Promised for Today.

A wet snow which began falling shortly after 7 p. m. yesterday thickened Washington's coat of ice, slush and previous snow.

Weather experts predicted warmer weather today with probable fair skies. With temperature reaching a high of 36 at 3 p. m. yesterday, perceptible melting was noticed on frozen streets. The thermometer registered 15 above at 5 a. m. yesterday.

Factor Kidnap Fugitive Held At Baltimore

Three Others Arrested in Trap; $14,000, Huge Arsenal Seized.

Baltimore, Feb. 11 (AP).—Basil (the Owl) Banghart, known to police as one of the cleverest criminals in America and under indictment in Chicago for the kidnaping of John Factor, international speculator, was captured here today.

He was taken without a struggle as he entered an automobile after having discovered that the apartments he rented here had been raided. Police said he told them he thought rival gangsters had closed in on him.

Isaac Costner, identified with Banghart as a member of the combination headed by Roger and Tommy Touhy, Chicago public enemies, was seized as he entered one of the two suites rented by Banghart.

Two women, whose names were given as Jessie Touhy and May Stewart, also were taken in the apartment in which was found $12,495 in $5 bills.

Raid Follows Tipoff.

This apartment had been virtually converted into an arsenal. In it were found two submachine guns, seven revolvers, one sawed-off shotgun and one rifle.

Tipped that the quartet had been making Baltimore their headquarters for the past two months, police had been on the lookout. Last night Sergt. Oscar Lusby received information where the gangsters could be found.

Twelve police officers were sent and seized the women. Later, Banghart entered the building.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Feb. 11 (AP).—The four-week strike of united anthacite miners, which has delayed production in colleries of the Luzerne-Lackawanna field, ends officially tomorrow.

Youth Kills Self As Girl Laughs At 'Puppy Love'

Houston, Tex., Feb. 11 (AP).—Clyde Amick, 19, a drug store worker, shot himself to death in his roadster today. Miss Lavada Butler, 20, told police, because she insisted he was taking their love affair too seriously.

"I told him this was only puppy love," the girl said in a statement to detectives, "and I thought that he should go to all the school dances and such and have a good time. He told me he did not want to go with anyone else."

Justice Campbell R. Overstreet returned a verdict of suicide.

500 Periled As Ice Breaks

Fishermen Escape Trap; Coast Guard Gives Warning.

Buffalo, N. Y., Feb. 11 (AP).—Between 400 and 500 fishermen, believed trapped for a time today on Lake Erie ice south of here by a sudden break inshore, were warned in time to reach land before the ice broke free.

The men were from a mile and a half to two miles out when a crack five miles long and from 100 to 300 feet wide appeared.

The break was discovered while they were still on a peninsula of ice. Coast guardsmen starting across to them, pushing their boats until open water was reached, warned them something was wrong and they started back in time to walk around the break before their peninsula became a floating island.

The men said they had felt the ice move, but had not realized it was beginning to break up inshore.

New Chinese Arsenal Started.

Canton, China, Feb. 11 (AP).—Construction of a new arsenal which will cost $21,000,000 has been started by Gen. Chen Chia-Tang, military ruler of Canton and Kwantung Province. Machinery worth $16,000,000 has been ordered from Europe.

Killing, Suicide Thwart Cupid On Altar Eve

Nurse's Lover, Formerly of Washington, Is Slain in Denver Street.

Denver, Feb. 11 (AP).—The love affair that Miss Anna E. Wendelin, pretty blonde nurse, had hoped would result in her marriage today was ended instead, police said, by her suicide after she shot and killed her intended mate, Willis W. Case, jr., wealthy New York and Denver clubman.

Case was born in Washington, D. C., and attended George Washington, Ohio State and Alfred Universities. In 1908, he was employed as a clerk by the Denver Fire Clay Co., which his father founded. When he retired in 1918, he was president of the firm.

Miss Wendelin drove 20 miles alone to Brighton, Colo., through a blinding snowstorm yesterday to obtain a marriage license.

Unused License Found.

Six hours later Case was shot to death as he and the nurse drove in his coupe along a crowded street. Then she shot herself three times, the police investigation showed. The unused license was found in the bosom of her dress.

Friends said Case had courted the nurse for several years, but she never was with him when he attended gay parties at fashionable Denver homes. She was 35, and he was 53.

Witnesses said Case's car had just started across a busy intersection when a hot was heard, closely followed by another. Case, who was driving, stopped the car before he tumbled from the door.

"She Shot Me" Last Words.

A. J. Dunst had just parked his car at the curb and Case fell into his arms. As he did so, three other shots were heard and Miss Wendelin slumped forward. The wounds were in her arm, body and head.

O nthe way to a hospital in an ambulance, Case told police Surgeon R. M. Campbell, "She shot me." Then he lapsed into unconsciousness. Miss Wendelin died without regaining consciousness.

The 60-year-old parents of Miss Wendelin disclosed they had been attempting to break up the affair.

"Its the fifth girl Case has fooled," the aged father said.

Fire Razes Home; 3 Dead, 2 Injured

Trio Is Trapped, Others Leap From Window.

Philadelphia, Feb. 11 (AP).—A woman and two young girls died today in a fire that destroyed a house in North Philadelphia. The dead were Lillian Widdas, 10; Dorothy Felix, 8, and Mrs. Carrie Oldroyd, 58.

Mrs. Oldroyd's son, Herbert Oldroyd, and his wife were seriously burned. They also suffered fractured legs, and head and internal injuries in leaping from their burning second-floor bedroom.

The girls were children of neighbors who were spending the night at the Oldroyd home.

Alone With Dead Mother, Tot's Sobs Into Telephone Bring Aid

Lynchburg, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—The story of how a telephone operator's devotion to duty brought help to a terrified, but brave little boy who was home alone when his mother died was revealed here today.

It occurred last Wednesday night. A signal flashed and the operator plugged in with the usual "number please." A thin treble responded:

"I want my grandma.'

The operator, limited by regulations to asking for the number and few formal phrases, switched the boy to the supervisor, Mrs. Elsie M. Taylor, and he repeated the request.

"What's your grandmother's name?" she asked.

The supervisor could not understand the name. She asked where the grandmother lived and the boy said "in a big white house on the corner." This did not help much.

Then she asked his name and was told, "Lloyd Hubbard, jr."

Mrs. Taylor remembered a Miss Barnes marrying a Mr. Hubbard. The child was connected with his grandmother, Mrs. C. M. Barnes, 1450 Rivermont avenue.

"Grandma," said the little boy, "can I come up there?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Barnes, "but why?"

"I'm all alone," the boy replied.

"Isn't your mother at home?" asked the grandmother.

The boy was weeping.

"Yes," he said, "but she is lying here on the floor and doesn't say anything."

What happened at the exchange then was a bit of routine. Mrs. Taylor called a physician. He found Mrs. Hubbard dead.

Mrs. Hubbard was the wife of L. A. Hubbard.

'Heavy Hydrogen' Paves Way For Great Scientific Strides

(Associated Press.)

Announcement was made here yesterday of the successful manufacture of a large sample of pure "heavy hydrogen" at Columbia University, New York—a chemical feat seen by Government scientists as opening the way to great scientific advances.

This "heavy hydrogen," like ordinary hydrogen except that its atom cores are twice as heavy, has been changed for the first time from a gas into both liquid and solid forms at the Bureau of Standards by R. B. Scott and Dr. F. G. Brickwedde, using the Columbia sample.

"Heavy hydrogen," one of the materials in the famous new "heavy water," makes this water poisonous so that seeds will not sprout and tadpoles die when placed in it. Heavy hydrogen has been studied as a part of the "heavy water" but never before has been isolated in large quantities. Its scientific name is deuterium.

Scientific possibilities of heavy hydrogen and heavy water are considered vast because ordinary hydrogen is a part of many substances which may be altered greatly by substituting heavy hydrogen in their composition.

The pure heavy hydrogen was prepared at Columbia by Dr. H. C. Urey and M. H. Wahl, and their accomplishment was revealed by Brickwedde in a report to the Washington Chemical Society on measurments of its vapor pressure. He and Urey were codiscoverers of heavy hydrogen.

BremerKidnap Gang Is Hunted In Two States

Hideout Where Captors Held Banker Still Is Unfound.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 11 (AP).—Authorities ranged Minnesota and Iowa today for clews to the kidnapers of Edward G. Bremer, wealthy banker, who paid $200,000 for his release last Wednesday night.

Seeking the unlocated hideout where the 37-year-old president of the Commercial State Bank was held captive 22 days, police and Federal operatives ran out every lead.

Maintaining a barrier of silence police refused to reveal whether they had anything to indicate Bremer had been taken out of the State January 17, when he was abducted. It was reported, however, Department of Justice agents were devoting attention to southwestern Iowa.

Outside Gang, Is Hint.

They refused to confirm a report a farm in that area might have been the place where Bremer was held.

Federal operatives, with the cooperation of local police, were combing southern Minnesota for possible traces of the gang, which Chief of Police Thomas Dahill here intimated might have come from outside the State to engineer the kidnaping.

It would not "surprise" him, Dahill said, if it was an outside gang working with a local fingerman that carried out the crime. Dahill admitted St. Paul police had asked Tulsa, Okla., authorities for the fingerprint classification and photograph of Harry Campbell, fugitive-slayer suspect.

"Anyone a Suspect."

Dahill would not admit Campbell was wanted here specifically for questioning in the Bremer case except to declare "anyone is a suspect."

It was in southern Minnesota, at Rochester, that Bremer was freed after payment of the ransom by Walter Magee, wealthy contractor intermediary for the family, in the Faribault, Minn., vicinity. Faribault also is south of the twin cities.

Whether investigators obtained any fingerprints from ransom notes delivered January 20, to Dr. H. T. Nippert, family friend and physician, was conjectural.

Virginia 'Rail Bills' Headed for Shelf

Measures Would Levy New Tax on Farmers.

In response to resolutions from various agricultural and civic associations and the granges, State Senator John W. Rust, of Fairfax County, Va., has issued a statement that the so-called "railroad bills" would be killed in the committee of the State Assembly.

These bills would classify farmers who haul produce for a neighbor or do any part-time hauling for hire as a common carrier and imposes an additional tax of $25 on him.

Senator Rust stated that these bills are being opposed by H. G. Shirley, State highway commissioner, and T. McCall Frazier, State motor vehicle commissioner, and they feel the legislation governing trucks adopted by the Assembly in 1932 should be continued without change. He declared that these bills if enacted would impose an additional burden on the farmers and for that reason alone he was opposed to their passage.

Hacker Tells Police "Fare" Held Him Up

Charlton L. Yates, a taxi driver, yesterday told police he was robbed at gunpoint by a "fare" who hired his cab for a trip to the Washington Airport.

He was hailed near Fourteenth and G streets northwest, Yates said. As they drove across Highway Bridge his passenger produced a gun and ordered him to stop. The gunman fled on foot after taking $5.

Diplomats May Settle Railroads' Border Fight

Santiago, Chile Feb. 11 (AP).—The government-owned newspaper Nacion today said the Chilean and Argentine governments must intervene to settle a trans-Andes railroad dispute, which is resulting in expense and discomfort to travelers of the two countries.

The railroad, the newspaper said, refused a Chilean proposal that it run cars further beyond the border to accommodate passengers.

Arlington Rate Board to Study Utilities Report

Citizens' Petition to Quit Falls Church Goes to Court Today.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

Continuing their fight for a reduction in electric light rates for Arlington County, Edmund D. Campbell, chairman of the Arlington County Public Utilities Commission, with Maj. Calvin Kephart, and Albert M. Jones, members, will leave today for Richmond for a conference with the State coroporation commission.

The commission expects tto review the report made by State engineers on the valuation of the properties of the Virginia Service Co., which serves the county.

Hearing on petitions of citizens of Falls Church within the limits of Arlington County to withdraw from the corporate limits of Falls Church will be heard today by Judge Walter T. McCarthy.

Mayor L. P. Daniels last night declared the school children of the disputed area either would have to be furnished transportation to the county schools or pay tuition to attend the Madison School in Falls Church, if the petition is granted.

A Founder's Day program will feature the monthly meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association of the Washington Lee High School Thursday night at 8o'clock in the school auditorium.

Plans are under way for the annual banquet of the Arlington Lodge, No. 193, I. O. O. F., to be held in the Odd Fellows Hall at Clarendon March 13, according to Norbert Melnick.

The committee on arrangements consists of H. C. Messner, chairman; Harvey Marcey, Walter Huffman, Walter Sharnoltz, Mrs. Eula Clements, Mrs. Sudie Mitchell, Mrs. Notie Huffman and Mrs. Frances Brooks.

General Strike On as Warning To Doumergue joining the walkout and schools were to close. The Paris Bourse, or exchange, was planning to attempt normal operations.

Demonstrations Staged.

Anti-Fascist demonstrations kept the nation on the qui vive Sunday. There were manifestations at Lille, Lyons, Rouen, Avignon and Toulon. Police were kept busy, but there was no serious rioting.

Meanwhile, the international temper and probable policy of the new Doumergue cabinet was clearly indicated in two notes, polite, but unshakable, dispatched to London.

One, it was understood, threatened reprisals in the Franco-British "war" over export and import commercial quotas if the British should impose certain surtaxes on French goods which they have announced will be effective Tuesday.

The other advised Sir Arthur Henderson, chairman of the recently postponed disarmament conference that Franco-German arms talks were at an impasse and there was little chance of an agreement in the near future.

It hinted further postponement of the disarmament conference was necessary.

Stand on Imports.

Concerning import quotas, the French note was understood to contain refusal to raise the British quotas to a full 100 per cent without preliminary bargaining.

The British, claiming discrimination, have announced their intention to place a surtax on French silks, furs, shoes and other wearing apparel.

The French note pointed out that the British will suffer the most from a trade war, since the trade balance between the two countries is half a billion francs in their favor.

Sufficient power to deal with the present internal crisis was said to be the probable concession Doumergue will seek from Parliament. This course would be an alternative to the dissolution of Parliament advocated by former Premier Andre Tardieu. The final decision on this will be taken after a vote on the budget at the end of February.

Stavisky Action Speeded.

Prosecution of the Stavisky scandal, which was the immediate cause of major rioting, because of the collapse of the Bayonne pawnshop, was ordered speeded.

A warrant for the arrest of Deputy Gaston Bonnaure, who was Serge Stavisky's lawyer, was issued at Bayonne.

Repercussions of the political truce began with the resignation of Fernand Emile Bouisson, president of the Chamber of Deputies, from the Socialist Party after 25 years of membership, because of criticisms of his efforts to bring the truce cabinet together.

New Balkan Pact Hailed As Triumph for Peace

Athens, Feb. 11 (AP).—The Balkan non-aggression pact, guaranteeing frontiers of Rumania, Greece, Yugoslavia, and Turkey for 10 years, is "the most powerful peace instrument those countries can give themselves," Foreign Minister Titulescu of Rumania said today.

The Balkan pact was formally signed by Foreign Ministers Maximos, of Greece, Titulescu, of Rumania, Jeftitch, of Yugoslavia, and Tewfik Rushdi Bey, of Turkey, in Tthens on February 9. Bulgaria and Albania did not sign, but at its initialing in Belgrade, February 5, it was said Bulgaria might sign it later.

Factor Gang Suspect Held In Maryland

went to the suite and on finding the woman gone, started to leave. As he stepped to his automobile he was covered by police guns.

The fourth arrest came this morning. Plainclothes officers and department of Justice agents maintained an all-night watch over the two apartments, one on the third floor and the other on the seventh.

Costner made an effort to enter the seventh-floor rooms and was taken when he returned to the elevator.

Banghart was armed but Costner was not. On Costner was found $1,486. He denied that he had any connection with Banghart and told police he had been staying in another part of the city.

Banghart denied connection with kidnapings or recent bank robberies. He was questioned particularly about a mail-truck robbery in Charlotte, N. C., November 12, in which $105,000 was taken.

Money Found In Bag.

Capt. John Mintiens of the Baltimore force, quoted Banghart as saying:

"I've got enough dough to be sent up for 25 years."

The money was found in hand bag, neatly done up in bundles. In other suitcases were the guns, and still another contained a complete makeup set, including all type of mustaches and whiskers.

Each of the four under arrest was placed in a different police station for questioning ond a guard placed around the apartment building in the hope of making further arrests.

Department of Justice officials were to take charge of the prisoners, Baltimore police said.

Banghart has a criminal record of nearly 20 years. After an escape from the Federol penitentiary at Atlanta in 1927 he shot his way out of jail at South Bend, Ind., where he was held while extradition proceedings were in progress.

The most spectacular incident, however, came last August when he escaped from one of the most elaborate police traps ever devised.

He and Charles Connors allegedly attempted to collect $50,000 from Factor, additional ransom after $70,000 already had been paid. A detective disguised as a messenger took a dummy package to southwest Chicago. As the police cordon closed in, the two men escaped.

Faces Chicago Indictment.

Informed of Banghart's arrest today, Factor expressed pleasure.

"The arrest will make it a much stronger case," he said.

Chicago, Feb. 10 (AP).—Basil (The Owl) Banghart, arrested today in Baltimore, is under indictment here for the kidnaping of John Factor, international speculator. He has long been identified with the combinations allegedly headed by the Touhy brothers, Tommy and Roger. Roger Touhy and two co-defendants are scheduled to go on trial again in the Factor case February 13. The jury in the first trial was unable to agree.

Melvin H. Purvis, chief of the division of investigation of the Department of Justce in Chicago, said: "It was a very good piece of police work, capturing Banghart. He is known to be 'doing a lot of work around the country.'"

Raid Was Daring.

Charlotte, N. C., Feb. 11 (AP).—The $105,000 mai ltruck robbery here last November 15 was staged with dramatic boldness in the heart of the city.

The daylight bandits blocked a street with a stolen automobile to halt the mail truck, covered the driver and a guard with machine guns and took four mail sacks, including a pouch of registered mail containing currency for the Federal Reserve Bank here.

Spanish Regime Hit By Former Premier

Madrid, Feb. 11 (AP).—Former Premier Manuel Azana today attacked the present regime before 1,500 persons in a theater, asserting "the present hours are the gravest since the establishment of the republic."

"The government is living on the charity of the Rightists, which is shameful," declared Azana, a member of the Left Republican party. "The immediate future holds serious possibilities."

the jury already has heard representatives of the motor car concerns.

With President Roosevelt's insistence that the investigation be widened, however, Army contracts for many other and diversified items, and alleged claims of influence in connection with them, are now the subject of inquiry.

In connection with one of these other items, involving leak-proof tubes, Federal agents are seeking for questioning Frank Speicher, who left town for parts unknown at a time when representatives of the Department of Justice were questioning one of his associates.

Speicher has been subpoenaed to appear before the present grand jury, but could not be found last night. It is understood he received a proposal from a man claiming influence with the Army, who offered to have the tubes in question included in military specifications, for a consideration running into thousands of dollars.

Senate Inquiry Proposed.

It had been expected that the grand jury would be ready with its this week, but with new developments resulting from each meeting of the jurors and conference of officials, it was said last night the deliberations may extend another week or more.

It was learned also that the grand jury's investigation of the alleged conspiracy to defraud the Government in connection with the $10,000,000 Army motorization program may be augmented by a Senate inquiry covering all persons and corporations engaged in making and selling steel, arms, munitions, and airplanes to the Army. Senator Gerald P. Nye (Republican), North Dakota, has introduced a resolution requesting such an investigation by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Democratic Group Indorses Johnson

Reelection Stand Taken in Hoover's Home District.

From the Democratic committee of the Eighth California District, in which Herbert Hoover lives, has come an indorsement for reelection of Senator Hiram W. Johnson, Republican, who supported President Roosevelt in his campaign for the Presidency, the Associated Press reports.

The committee in a resolution adopted at San Mateo Saturday and made public here yesterday also indorsed for reelection Representative J. J. McGrath, Democrat of the Eighth California District, who led virtually all of the State's Democratic delegation in the House in indorsing Senator Johnson for reelection.

Peru Public Enemy Slain in Gun Fight

Gangster Shoots 2 After Chase Through Lima.

Lima, Peru, Feb. 11 (AP).—Eduardo Arnao, notorious gangster who had been the object of a man-hunt for months, was shot to death last night by police and secret service men, after a spectacular chase.

Arnao was riding in a taxi when police spotted him. They pursued him several blocks to the square of San Marcos University, where the bandit emptied his pistol, wounding a policeman critically and a bystander before he was shot.

The bandit recently killed a secret service man.

Man Shot, Another Beaten in Affray

Participants in Street Fight Flee Arrest.

One man was shot and another seriously injured by a blow on the head early yesterday, during a gang fight near Sixth and D streets southwest.

Wilbur Moody, colored, 32, of 1018 Maryland avenue southwest, was taken to Emergency Hospital with a bullet wound in his shoulder. With Hugh Cillington, colored, 32, of 433 Six-and-one-holf street southwest, he was sent to Gallinger Hospital for investigation. Cillington suffered a possible fractured skull when struck on the head.

Police were unable to learn identity of the assailants. Participants in the fight scattered with the arrival of police. Moody and Cillington were found lying on the sidewalk.

Peruvian Marrymakers Poisoned by Ice Cream

Lima, Peru, Feb. 11 (AP).—Three days of Latin-America carnival began in the hospital today for 100 persons who ate contaminated ice cream, but the victims were reported out of danger.

The consumption of the delicacy fell off notably as the city swung into the festival spirit. The outbreak of food poisoning was still being investigated by authorities.

Bond Conversion Costs Il Duce $9,861,350

Rome, Feb. 11 (AP).—The government announced today that 2,729 Italians living at home and abroad had asked for reimbursement amounting to approximately $1,000,000 on Premier Mussolini's recently announced bond conversion scheme.

At the expiration of a five-day period granted for the conversion, reimbursements amounted to only 123,266,900 lire $9,861,350).

Second Tavern Swept by Fire In Two Weeks

South Roanoke Woman and Maid Suffer Severe Burns.

Fredericksburg, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—The second fire loss within two weeks was suffered last night by Thomas J. Waller when the Aquia Tavern burned.

On January 31 the Quiyough Tea Room, several miles north of Aquia Tavern and also owned by Mr. Waller, was destroyed by fire.

A smouldering cigarette butt is believed to have started the fire, Mr. Walter said.

Bungalow Also Burns.

A bungalow at the rear of the tavern and occupied by Marine Sergt. Gordon W. Heritage and his wife also burned.

Seven fires were extinguished here during the last two days before any gained great headway.

The most serious of the fires, which threatened the home of Stark Mills when an oil stove exploded, was extinguished without extensive damage.

Two Injured by Blaze.

Roanoke, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Mrs. H. G. Nicholson, of Wildwood road, South Roanoke, and her colored maid, Daisy Walley, are recovering in a local hospital from serious burns received when gasoline they were using to clean a floor at Mrs. Nicholson's home caught fire.

Mrs. Nicholson's condition was described by physicians as serious but her recovery was expected. The maid was burned about the ankles and legs. The home was damaged.

Home Burns Near Glebe.

Leonardtown, Md., Feb. 11 (Spl.). The home of Thomas Bennett near Glebe, was destroyed yesterday by fire.

Three calls for the Leonardtown Volunteer Fire Department came in quick succession Friday, with the thermometer at 7 below.

The first was canceled when a fire at Red Gates, 5 miles away, proved to be a chimney fire that was soon extinguished. The engine was not put away before the second alarm called them to Laurel Grove, 10 miles in another direction. Barnard Smith, Chief engineer of the company, had his face and ears badly frostbitten and had to have medical attention. He was driving the truck. Several other firemen suffered frostbitten ears and fingers.

While answering this call, another alarm came in from Bushwood, 15 miles away. A number of firemen went there in private cars and helped control a fire in the property of W. S. Thrall, which threatened to spread to serious proportions.

Virginian Robbed By "New Friends"

Beaten and Thrown From Auto Unconscious.

Attacked by two new-found "friends," Alexander Boyd, 29, of Lorton, Va., was beaten, robbed, thrown from his automobile and left unconscious in an alley early yesterday.

Boyd told police he met two men in the lobby of a downtown theater. The three became friendly, he said, and it was suggested they go for a ride. They drove about in his machine for several hours, Boyd reported, and then some one suggested a drink.

In an alley near Thirteenth and Queen streets northeast, where Boyd was directed to drive, one of the men suddenly produced a gun. When Boyd protested, he said, the gun butt was used to hit him on the head. Hhe was robbed of his billfold, containing $25, and thrown from the car.

Rural Mail Carrier Since 1903 Retires

248,000 Miles Traveled by Clear Spring, Md., Man.

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 11 (Spl.). The Postoffice Department has announced the retirement March 1 of Robert N. Bain, rural mail carrier at Clear Spring after 31 years of service.

During that time Bain has traveled 248,000 miles on foot, horseback, buggy, sleigh and automobile.

Twenty years ago Bain was dazed by a bolt of lightning while on his route, but was revived sufficiently by one of his patrons to continue delivery of mail.

Department Store Sales Increase

Business in D. C. Section Shows Sharp Gain.

Richmond, Feb. 11 (AP).—The Fifth Federal Reserve District last month registered a gain of 14 per cent in dollar amount of department store sales as compared with January, 1933, the bank reported today.

Three Richmond stores showed a combined increase of 30.1 per cent. Reports of the bank showed 42 of the 46 reporting stores in the district showed improved business.

Twelve Virginia stores showed 26 per cent gain, nine West Virginia members 32.2 per cent gain; nine stores in the Carolinas 23.5 per cent gain, and eight Washington, D. C., stores 10.1 gain. The gain for the United States was 18 per cent.

Wardman Park Hotel Drug Store Ransacked

Gaining entrance by the use of a duplicate key, intruders early yesterday ransacked the Wardman Park Hotel drug store and looted a cash drawer of $57.

The New Dealers

democracy can function in no other way. The only alternative to this psychological struggle, the bribery and assassination and police methods of a State in the process of decomposition. Roosevelt does not believe that America is in a state of decay and does not propose to erect artificial barriers to the free play of political forces. He is running a brokerage office and not a bucket-shop.

He is a political croupier and not a political card sharper. His personality is perfectly adapted to maintain this position of neutrality as between the contesting forces. He follows the play rather than any system.

Nothing could better illustrate this fact than his relations with the Wall street men who tried to block his nomination, who branded him as a dangerous radical, and who regarded his election with horrified misgivings. Far from being outcasts, they enjoy exactly the same right to urge their views and policies as are enjoyed by the F. R. B. C. men. He regards them less as political enemies or as enemies of the people than as representatives of an obsolete mentality and dying economic order. He treats them as simply one of the major political factors in the country—which they are—that must be brought into balance with the other forces in politics.

He Leads the Country By Following the Crowds.

After the Chicago Convention, Gen. Hugh Johnson, who had worked hard with Barney Baruch to stop Roosevelt, was asked what he thought of his nomination. Johnson replied by recalling a story of a county convention of Democrats in which the wrong man had been chosen. Driving home from the meeting, two politicians were comparing notes. Both had opposed the successful candidate. One said to the other, "Damn it all! We should never have let them put Blank over. He's a So and So!" The other man sighed and said nothing for a long time. Then he cheered up. "After all," he observed, "Blank isn't so bad. He's our So and So!" A year later, Johnson was one of Roosevelt's principal administrators, leading the fight for the N. R. A. against the embattled heavy industries which had wrecked the policies of Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson.

Roosevelt's personality is the answer to this amazing somersault. With any other man it would have been a miracle. It is not with F. D. R., for it is entirely natural to him. He has the instinct for power and the intuition to realize that political power is nothing but the focus of forces which are far greater than the man who handles them. His leadership is the art of not leading, but following the crowd. He has sense enough to trust the people. He likes them.

The Industrial Ogpu.

WHEN Roosevelt assumed office the sorest point in our whole business system was the industrial set-up. For generations we had been piling factory on factory, machine on machine. Trusts and monopolies had developed, spread, been loudly dissolved and then quietly reestablished.

The antitrust laws and the Federal Trade Commission had proved incapable of halting the process and had succeeded only in exposing the smaller industrial units to cut-throat opposition.

The great bankers, through whom the necessary process of industrial coordination had been effected, by means of holding companies and interlocking directors, had been seduced by the hopes of easy profits into a flagrant debauchery of both industry and the investing public.

The result; when the crash came, was a monstrous system of frozen high prices, bloated "fixed charges," fantastic unemployment, and ruined investors.

Child labor was multiplying, sweat-shops were the rule rather than the exception in many lines of work, and the organized labor movement had been crushed until in only four fields—printing, the theater, rail transportation and the building trades—was there anything like complete unionization, with its many evils but also with its assurance of relatively high wages.

Immediate Action Needed To Avert Economic Collapse.

Something had to be done at once, if the whole of our economy was not to collapse into complete paralysis. The answer was the establishment—not of a planned economy, as many had hoped—but of an industrial G.P.U., a Federal mobilization and policing of industry in the interest of continued operations, through the NRA.

The execution of the NIRA was entrusted to an extraordinary team of human beings, which included the professional "bad boy" of American life, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson; that versatile, cultured attorney for the railway brotherhoods, Donald Randall Richberg, of Chicago; a gang of business-minded administrators such as Whiteside, Simpson, and Muir; the god-parents of the measure—Senator Wagner and Gerard Swope; the union labor leaders, Lewis, Green and McGrady; industrial economists like Wolman; and those who wanted to protect the consumer against the unconscionable extortions and gouging which were traditional in any agreement between capital and labor; Fred Howe, Mary Rumsey and the newer sociologists who held that the key to the future lay in the direction of consumption rather than production.

The NRA started with a bang, with rosy hopes and magnificent promises, but it soon became apparent that Gen. Johnson's task was no joke. He had to assure the public that this would be the greatest show on earth at the same time that he endeavored to persuade the blood-stained coal industry, the anthropoidal steel trust and the neolithic automobile business to pose as Miss America in the grand tableau at the end of the first act.

The railways, the coal and oil men, the iron and steel industries and their bankers formed a Hindenburg line which had wrecked previous offenses. They had forced Theodore Roosevelt to back down and take the round-about and ineffective route of trust-busting.

Combination of Hog-Calling And Torchlight Parade.

It was a job which called for the services, not of a statesman nor of an economist, but of a lion tamer and a breaker of wild horses. Later, perhaps, would come the time for real economic reorganization. The need of the moment was for a combined punitive expedition, hog-calling contest and torchlight parade. The answer to that need was the combined riot squad, ballyhoo and crusade led by the NRA, under the totem of the Blue Eagle and the leadership of Hugh Samuel Johnson and his merry men.

Hugh Johnson has been a bad boy all his life, blustering, dictatorial and appealing. Born in Fort Scott, Kans., 53 years ago, the son of an unsuccessful Illinois country lawyer, Johnson was brought up in Alva, Okla., where his father became postmaster by the appointment of Grover Cleveland.

At the age of 16 he ran away to go to the Spanish-American War, but was recaptured by his father and sent to West Point. For four years Johnson stood at the foot of his class in deportment—cause: Chronic insubordination. He emerged in 1903 as a lieutenant of cavalry and remained in the Army until 1919.

His Army career was curiously uneventful. He served in the Philippines, where his only distinction was fracturing the jaw of a drunken private. He accompanied Pershing's "punitive expedition" into northern Mexico in 1916, as law officer. Gen. Johnson drafted and applied the draft act when we went to war with Germany in 1917, and was slated to command a brigade in France when the armistice broke out. His draft act work earned him a D. S. M. and was one of the miracles of our history—the first popularly accepted and smoothly-running piece of military conscription since the birth of the Republic.

Headed Stop-Roosevelt Move; Later Did a Flip-Flop.

After the war, he jumped out of the Army and into business, joining George Peek in the "wrecking crew" which ran the Moline Plow Co., and then, in 1929, joining the little group of economic sharpshooters headed by Bernard M. Baruch. With Baruch, he foresaw the crash a year before it hit Wall street and if he didn't make a fortune at it, it was his own fault.

He was heart-and-soul in the "Stop Roosevelt!" movement before the Chicago convention and, until Baruch made his peace with Roosevelt, was inclined to toy with Napoleonic ideas.

Early in 1932, he quietly circulated in Wall street circles an ironic program, entitled "Muscle-Inny," for the establishment of an economic dictatorship and the deporation of Congress, and he exchanged ideas with Herbert Hoover's backer, Mark L. Requa, for the summoning of a Constitutional convention in order to recast the entire Government to meet the needs of the crisis.

Shortly thereafter, however, he put aside these childish things and jumped feet first into the Roosevelt campaign brain trust, where he made more than good by his demoniac energy and his mischievous intelligence.

Mrs. Roosevelt Pays Surprise Visit to Miners

Homestead Village Amazed as First Lady Arrives for Breakfast.

Morgantown, W. Va., Feb. 11 (AP). The Dominion News, in a copyrighted article, says Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt today paid a surprise visit to the Arthurdale homesteads, which she has been instrumental in establishing for rehabilitation of unemployed miners.

The newspaper says the First Lady arrived in Fairmont at 7:30 a. m., and was taken by automobile to Arthurdale, 15 miles from Morgantown, where she joined the homesteaders at breakfast.

Plans for the purchase of homes and land by the men were discussed. Mrs. Roosevelt asked many questions and the men in turn brought up problems involving Federal aid.

Plans for a school at the homestead were discussed at a meeting this afternoon which Monongalia and Preston County educators attended.

The newspaper adds that Mrs. Roosevelt has shown a personal interest in the Arthurdale project since the development was launched and that she plans other visits in the near future.

About 60 homes have been built and 75 others are to be erected. About 125 families will be settled at Arthurdale by April 1.

Accompanying Mrs. Roosevelt, who left tonight via a Baltimore & Ohio train for Washington, were Miss Nancy Cook and Clarence Pickett, of the Department of Interior.

Reynolds Plans World Cruise

Tobacco Heir and Family to Sail From Norfolk on Yacht.

Winston-Salem, N. C., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—R. J. Reynolds, jr., his wife and child will sail from Norfolk, Va., in June or July on the yacht Harpoon on a long cruise that might take them around the world.

Young Reynolds on April 4 will inherit $30,000,000, part of the vast fortune of his father. Reynolds will be 28 years old on that date.

He had planned a cruise last fall but illness of his wife caused a delay.

Man Dies in Hospital After Being Hit on Road

Leonardtown, Md., Feb. 11 (Spl.). Apparently the victim of a hit and run driver, Albert Boom, 42 years old, colored, of Palmers, Md., was found lying in the road, partly frozen, by the Rev. S. J. Rutke, and brought to the St. Marys Hospital here. His skull was fractured and he was suffering from exposure.

He died without being able to tell how he was injured.

Two Glendale Fire Victims Recovering

Casualty Hospital officials last night reported both Mrs. Ann McGuire, 29, and her daughter, Helen, 6, as recovering from serious burns received when their Glendale (Md.) home burned early Saturday.

John Thomas McGuire, the husband and father, was burned to death. Another child escaped injury.

Construction Drops.

Lynchburg, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Only 12 permits for new building were issued here during January, work on these costing $18,000. In the same month last year there were 19 permits for work costing $27,000.

D. C. Will Get $200,000 Fund To Aid Needy

Heavy Drain on Aid Due to Cold; Additional Help Sought.

District emergency relief headquarters will receive $200,000 today from Federal relief sources to care for the increasing number of needy families in Washington during the next month, Leroy A. Halbert, District relief administrator, said yesterday.

Application for another sum, possibly as large if not larger than the one to be received today, will be made March 1 to continue the relief work into spring, he said.

The $200,000 comes at an opportune time to meet the needs of 13,889 families, 4,000 more than were on relief rolls January 1, Mr. Halbert said. The increase in recipients of relief is attributed by the director to the curtailment of CWA and the inclement weather. Many of the families who were returned to the relief rolls were able to carry on independently through the employment under the CWA.

The number of hours they worked, however, reduced by the poor weather, impaired their income. About 1,000 families are affected by this situation, Halbert said.

The cold wave drew heavily on the funds because of demands for coal. Normally, the relief headquarters supplies 200 families a day with coal, but during the cold wave this number was increased to 1,000.

If the volume of applicants continues to increase, Mr. Halbert may find it necessary to ask for more workers and improvement of relief headquarters facilities. Applicants, in some cases, must wait in the cold because of lack of space in the relief offices, the director said.

R. A. Young, Merchant, Dies at Gaithersburg

Robert A. Young, 87, for 40 years a well-known merchant in Gaithersburg, Md., died early yesterday at his home there. Funeral services will be held at the home at 2 p. m. tomorrow with burial in Forets Oak Cemetery.

Mr. Young wa sa native of St. Mary's County. He is survived by the widow, Mrs. Rosa Linthicum Young, and a son, Robert L. Young. He was a vestryman of the Episcopal Church of the Ascension.

Virginia Fight For Rum Profit Enlivens Week

State and Subdivisions at Grips for Income From Liquor.

By Doug Warrenfels.

Richmond, Feb. 11.—With liquor legislation nearing enactment, the biggest issue likely to be decided this week by the General Assembly will revolve around distribution of rum profits.

The Administration leaders have insisted on the State receiving all revenue from prospective operation of a dispensary system. The action of former Gov. John Garland Pollard in figuring the 1934-35 budget on that basis has irked many lawmakers.

The result has been a storm of criticism. The forces of Gov. George C. Peery already have compromised mildly and probably will make further concessions before they hear the last of the controversy.

Delegate George W. Herring, Woodbridge, precipitated the first test of strength in the House a fortnight ago by attempting amendment of the whisky bill to give political subdivisions 65 per cent of the profits and permit the remainder to flow into State coffers. His proposal was approved by a 1-vote margin.

House Action Reversed.

There was much frantic long distance telephoning to home town political bosses that night. Several delegates promptly suffered a change of heart. The next day the House reconsidered its original action and rejected the amendment.

Undismayed, Herring trimmed the ante to 50 per cent and advanced a separate measure patterned after his unsuccessful amendment. So far that bill has not been reported out of committee.

Delegate W. Stuart Moffett, Staunton, offered another measure which would divide 10 per cent of the liquor revenue among cities and counties with the lion's share apportioned to the State.

Then the liquor bill reached the Senate finance committee, where Senator John W. Eggleston, of Norfolk, enlivened the proceedings by suggesting two-thirds of all profits be delegated to political subdivisions.

Eggleston Move Pending.

He contended counties and cities would need the money to finance additional police protection.

After debate behind closed doors the committee voted to give the State all of the profits up to $1,700,000 a year, with the political subdivisions to get two-thirds of the excess, if any. Experts previously estimated whisky revenue would total $1,650,000 the first year.

As matters now stand, a move probably will be made to have the Senate adopt the Eggleston amendment in its original form. Then, too, the Herring or Moffett bills might survive the legislative mill.

At any rate, the Senate will begin considering the liquor bill Tuesday or Wednesday.

Meanwhile, Peery prepared to attend a joint meeting of the Senate appropriations committee and the House finance committee tomorrow night to explain his unpopular program for additional taxes.

Assembly Faces Crucial Week.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 11 (AP).—A crucial week looms ahead of the Virginia General Assembly as it begins the second half of its 1934 session tomorrow.

Gov. Peery's $875,000 tax program for schools, to come before finance and appropriations committees at a joint public hearing tomorrow night, with the governor appearing in person, holds chief interest.

Major measures and controversial legislation on the calendars of both houses shared immediate attention, however. The Holt Congressional redistricting bill which failed of passage in the House Friday, 73 to 29, because of the emergency clause requiring a four-fifths vote, is expected to come up tomorrow on a motion to reconsider.

The house also has on its calendar the controversial Sunday baseball and picture show bills and the Hall racing and parimutuel betting bills. The senate has in the offing the Weaver bill to grant pensions to widows of Confederate veterans who were married as recently as December 31, 1933.

While the governor's tax program is being discussed in one end of the capitol tomorrow night, the senate general laws committee will be hearing proponents and opponents of the resolution to ratify the child labor amendment to the United States Constitution. The Socialist party of Virginia today reiterated its stand in favor of the amendment.

It appeared tonight that at least four methods of financing the governor's school program would be offered. In addition to the Peery program, Delegate Alvin Massenburg, of Hampton, has prepared a 2 per cent sales tax bill, and Senators W. A. Wright and William M. Tuck are drafting bills to permit the localities to borrow money for schools from the literary fund, with the State holding delinquent tax receipts as security. Senator Weaver has introduced a bill to permit the State to continue the deficit of over $2,000,000 for the biennium.

Governor Peery's program has as its chief items an increase in the merchants' license tax, an increase in individual income taxes through lowered exemptions, lowered exemptions on inheritances, and several items for taxation of utilities.

Underpass Contract Awarded for $34,407

Woodbridge, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.). The low bid of $34,407.13 for the widening of the underpass where the Richmond, Fredericksburg, & Potomac Railroad crosses the Richmond-Washington Highway north of here was submitted by the Northern Virginia Construction Co., of Clarendon, and work is expected to begin early next spring, it was announced by the State Highway Department.

This and the Government railroad underpass at Occotink are the only two places remaining on the highway not widened to accommodate three-lane traffic.

Roanoke "Gas Mystery" Fluid Clews Traced

Attacks Continue Over Botetourt County, Puzzle Police.

Roanoke, Va., Feb. 11 (AP).—The first clew in the investigation of a series of reported attacks by a mysterious "gasser" in Botetourt County in recent weeks and in Roanoke for the past four nights, was discovered yesterday when a bottle containing an oily solution, with a sweet odor, was turned over to Sheriff L. T. Mundy, of Botetourt County.

This solution, consisting chiefly of melted snow scooped up Friday night after gas was believed to have been loosed at a Botetourt residence, was brought to a hospital to be analyzed. Hospital physicians, in examining the fluid this afternoon, said they noted the presence of kerosene and described the solution as containing fly exterminator.

Five reports of suspected visits of the "gasser" were made to police tonight and three persons were reported to have become ill after a strange odor was detected.

Gas company employes, called to one home, found a door stuffed with towels, they told police. When the gas line was found intact, the theory that the fumes were loosed by the "gasser," was advanced.

On the porch the gas company employes found several pieces of grayish substance, described by police as rubber eraser.

In another instance, police found a lump of coal, apparently thrown from an alley, had broken into bits when it struck the porch.

Police were called to another residence when a baby was sezed with a violent coughing attack. Members of the family feared some kind of gas had been loosed in the house.

Roanoke Policemen Baffled by Reports

Roanoke, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.). Whether Roanoke residents have an attack of "heeby-jeebies" and are imagining themselves victims of a gassing plot, is a question concerning local police.

The police have had calls to investigate 13 cases where persons declared that noxious fumes suddenly spread through their homes were making members of the family seriously ill. One woman was treated at a hospital following a reported gas attack.

In one or two instances, it was learned, some one had stirred up coal in the furnace. The "unusual" odor was believed to have been from the furnace.

On the other hand, there is a sequence of events that lead some to believe a real gas hurler is slipping around back doors. The first alleged gas attack was reported in Botetourt County last December 22 when a Huffman family was made seriously ill. A daughter, 17, still is in bed.

Once the account of the "gassing" was spread about, there were innumerable reports of "peculiar odors" in homes over a large part of Botetourt County.

The gasser, if any, is reported to leave tracks under windows and these tracks invariably are made by a woman's high-heeled shoe.

Mt. Rainier Girl Hurt As Car Strikes Truck

Miss Hilda Acuff, 22, of Mount Rainier, Md., was brought to Sibley Hospital early yesterday suffering from injuries received in an automobile accident near the District Line in Prince Georges County, Md.

Samuel T. Hill, 28, of 1912 R street northwest, told police he was driving the machine in which Miss Acuff was a passenger. His car was in collision with a truck, he said. Miss Acuff was treated for lacerations on her face and head.

Virginia Says Cold Fault of Senator

Richmond, Feb. 11 (AP).—Circumstantial evidence may convict State Senator Taylor G. Vaughan of the major "crime" of being responsible for the zero weather that swept across the Old Dominion.

Clifton Forge Bank Due to Open Soon

Depositors Asked to Buy $30,000 Stock.

Clifton Forge, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.). Reorganization of the Clifton Forge National Bank in this city is almost completeed and the bank, closed since last March, will probably reopen within a few weeks.

The reorganization plan requires stockholders in the old bank to subscribe to $40,000 of capital stock in the new bank and to put up in addition $20,000 to be used for the benefit of the depositors. Both of these funds have been subscribed and the depositors are now asked as the final step to subscribe to $30,000 of stock and to waive 40 per cent of their deposits.

When this is done the plan will be completed and the bank will reopen. With the reopening 60 per cent of the amount on deposit in the old bank will be immediately available to the depositors. Approximately $600,000 will be released in this manner to several thousand depositors.

Frostburg Teachers Given New Classes

Trio Arrested In Liquor Raid At Hagerstown

Two Are Held in $1,000 Bond, and Third Is Dismissed.

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Charged with violation of the new liquor laws, Harry McCoy and Curtis Riley, were held in $1,000 bond yesterday by Magistrate Richard Duffey for court action. They are charged with possessing untaxed liquor for purpose of sale. Herman Leigh, arrested at the McCoy home, was dismissed.

Police Captain Clarence Emmert announced that local police will continue to enforce the liquor laws. Yesterday's raid was the first in which police participated with Federal agents.

Emmert also has fixed Thursday as the deadline for the withdrawal of several hundred money slot machines here and in the county.

The police head was informed that one man here had 109 machines in stores, roadhouses and clubs in this section.

Three Held in Train Robberies.

Cumberland, Md., Feb. 11 (Spl.). Charged with robbing Baltimore & Ohio freight trains in interstate traffic, Harry B. Hauger, 32; Floyd W. Hager, 47, and Fred Strawser, 27, said to be former Baltimore & Ohio employes, are in jail at Keyser, W. Va., in default of $1,000 bond each for the action of Federal court at Martinsburg, W. Va., in March.

The arrests were brought about by Capt. H. D. Schmidt, head of the Baltimore & Ohio Police Department, Cumberland division. The robberies began in December and so far more than $1,000 worth of loot has been recovered. Officers who made the arrests say the accused admitted participation in the robberies. Last week three trains were robbed.

According to the officers, fast freight, No. 97, was boarded about a mile west of Terra Alta and 10 miles west of Oakland, Md., where a nightly stop is made to inspect brakes and other equipment before descending the grade. During the lay-over cars were entered and merchandise tossed out, hauled away in trucks and cached.

Search warrants resulted in the recovery of cartons of cigarettes, tobacco, automobile accessories, clothing and other merchandise.

Clothing Thief Sentenced.

Fredericksburg, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Six months on the State road force was the sentence imposed on John Dale Brannan, 34, of Richmond and Norfolk, for the theft of clothing from the office of Capt. James Shipp in the Salvation Army Building.

A 60-day suspended sentence had been passed on Brannan last November when he was charged with vagrancy, petty larceny and threatening two persons with a knife.

Assistant Police Justice Lemuel W. Houston also imposed a six-month suspended sentence on Roy Garrett, 30, who pleaded guilty to the theft of a pocketbook containing $8.45 from Mrs. Elnora Belvin, of Liberty street, which he said he stole because he "needed the money for clothes."

Prof. Sherbondy Outlines Industrial Evils Leading to National Recovery Legislation

Manufacturers Attempted to Invoke Codes But Lacked Authority.

By Donald J. Sherbondy.

The institution of a program of governmental supervision of industry under the NRA is perhaps the inevitable result of conditions which came to the surface of our economic society during this depression. For more than 150 years, we have been living under a capitalistic system whose cardinal principle has been that the greatest possible economic freedom should be allowed the individual.

We have called it rugged individualism, paraphrased by less ardent admirers as "ragged" individualism. The proponents of that system have insisted that "that government is best which governs least," certainly so far as governing their economic activities was concerned.

But recurring periods of depression and distress in our economic history culminating in this last and seemingly endless period of chaos and misery, have raised strong doubts in the minds of many as to the soundness of an unregulated economic system which gives free rein to the individual's desire to make profits, often at the expense of his fellow men.

Theory Not New.

Even before this recent depression, there was a growing conviction among liberal economists and industrialists that eventually some type of a planned economic society would have to be established in the United States if certain conditions that were not only unjust socially, but economically defective, were to be remedied. Much was said about the unequal distribution of wealth which by 1929 had become so acute that 1 per cent of those who reported income tax returns owned approximately 23 per cent of the National income. The percentage of the National income controlled by this 1 per cent had almost doubled in the short period from 1921 to 1929.

While this concentration of wealth continued in the upper classes, many millions of the poorer classes were living and working in almost unbelievable conditions. The desire for profits upon the part of industrial owners made it necessary to keep production costs as low as possible in order to undersell competitors. Cutting labor costs resulted in low wages, unsanitary working conditions, typified in the so-called "sweat" shops, and the inhuman use of child labor.

One of the most unfortunate parts of the entire system was the inability of honest, high-minded industrialists to exist in business without adopting lowered labor standards. If an unscrupulous rival cut labor costs with a resulting cut in prices, the honest business man had to follow that example. There was no effective way to keep customers but to cut prices, to meet "fire with fire," to combat low wages with lower wages. Not only were wages cut, but competitors did not hesitate to misrepresent the qualities and quantities of products, to adulterate foods and to obtain sales by bribery.

Business Codes Tried.

In an attempt to meet such chaotic conditions, many industrialists combined with trade associations for the purpose of establishing a set of rules to regulate the game of competition. But these associations lacked the governmental authority, inherent in legislation, to enforce their codes of business ethics. In addition, the trade associations were handicapped by the Federal antitrust laws which prohibited associations or monopolies which tended to restrict competition. Many of the trade association's activities to remedy economic conditions were construed as illegal and tending to restrict commerce and competition.

Concentration of Wealth Cited as Example of Need for Change.

All of these conditions became more acute during the four depression years. As sales and profits dropped off, wages had to be cut and workers discharged. Wages dropped to a bare subsistence level, child labor increased, and streets were crowded with the unemployed. Approximately 15,000,000 able-bodied workers were discharged and more than a fourth of our entire population was forced to live on private or public charity.

The country had experienced numerous depressions and waited hopefully for this one to end. But as conditions became worse and three years passed with little improvement, the country was reduced to a spirit of fateful despair. At this critical period Franklin Roosevelt stepped into the political arena and, with his vibrant, confident personality, was swept into the White House. He had promised a new deal and immediately it began to unfold. His new deal was composed of many parts—bank reform, agricultural relief, currency revision, and a system of industrial control, which was embodied in the National industrial recovery act, or NIRA (NRA is interpreted to mean National Recovery Administration—the organization set up to put the system of industrial control into operation). NIRA is merely one of a number of new deal laws.

Fox Urges Cheaper Liquor to Curb Bootlegger.

Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.). Fred L. Fox, State tax commissioner, believes the State tax on whisky should be reduced and he has set out to convince legislators.

Fox believes a reduction would not only increase revenue but help drive the bootlegger out of business. He will appear before a subcommittee of the Senate finance committee soon to discuss a bill now pending which provides for a slash of the drug store whisky tax from 50 to 20 cents a pint.

Elizabeth City Hit By $50,000 Blaze

Cold Hampers Firemen in Spectacular Fight.

Elizabeth City, N. C., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Fire causing damage estimated at $50,000 last night broke out in the Flora Building, one of the principal structures of downtown Elizabeth City.

Five trucks responded to alarms, and fires had to be built around hydrants to thaw them out before streams could be connected. Two of the pumpers drew water from the river, a block away, and within half an hour seven lines were connected. The whole town turned out for the fire, which was one of the most spectacular here in years.

Virginia's Gas Tax Under Fire

Campaign Starts to Induce Lawmakers to Cut Levy 1 Cent.

Staunton, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Estimating the saving to consumers in Virginia would be about $2,305,130, the Virginia Petroleum Industries committee has launched its campaign to induce the Legislature, now in session, to adopt the Scott-Daughton bill, which would reduce the gasoline tax from 5 to 4 cents.

Thousands of motorists will be asked to petition their delegates or senators in the General Assembly to support the bill. In the Staunton area McL. Smith is directing the committee's "1934 voluntary gasoline tax referendum."

The committee estimates counties in this section would benefit under the 1-cent reduction as follows:

Augusta, $59,680; Bath, $9,320; Albemarle, $55,480; Alleghany, $26,310; Frederick, $34,790; Highland, $4,710; Nelson, $16,280; Rockbridge, $28,610; Rockingham, $52,320; Shenandoah, $27,110.

J. J. Cornwell Will Address Fruit Growers

West Virginia Horticulture Society to Convene at Martinsburg.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—John J. Cornwell, of Baltimore, war-time Governor of West Virginia, will make the principal address at the annual banquet of the West Virginia Horticulture Society here Wednesday evening, it was announced today.

The banquet is the feature of the annual two-day session of the society.

The banquet program, announced today by Carroll R. Miller, secretary, includes as a speaker the Rev. John Ward Brown, Baptist pastor here, and W. H. S. White, president of Shepherd College, Shepherdstown, W. Va., as toastmaster.

Porter Taylor, assistant chief, Agriculture Adjustment Administration, Washington, will speak Thursday morning in place of Dr. H. R. Tolley, of Washington.

Apple Show Concluded.

The apple show of Farm and Home week at Morgantown was concluded yesterday.

James and Isaac Van Metre, jr., and John Y. McDonald, of Jefferson County, were place winners. James Van Metre was fourth in horse-judging and third in judging sheep. Miss Evelyn Dahmer, of Petersburg, took first prize in the egg show in class 3, for 4-H members, and carried off sweepstakes.

McDonald, in the apple show, won first and second for Delicious and Grimes Golden; first and third for Staymen plates, third for Jonathan, second and third for Yorks and second for "other varieties." Sweepstakes went to T. J. Downs, of Farmington, with 36 points.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—W. H. Bardall, widely known Marshall County dairyman, will head the West Virginia Holstein Association for another year.

Other officers include H. H. Carmen, of Wellsburg, vice president; J. W. Hopkins, of Morgantown, secretary-treasurer, and T. B. Williams, of Triadelphia, corresponding secretary.

Poultry Code Unit Picked.

Cumberland, Md., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Charged with the supervision and enforcement of the code for hatcherymen, small breeders and dealers, H. J. Pearson, of Frostburg, was elected chairman of the compliance committee for Allegany County at a meeting in the City Hall Auditorium.

Other members of the committee are John Armstrong, of Potomac Valley section; Wilmer B. Harper, of Cumberland; Albert O'Neal, of Union Grove; Wilbur Perris, of Flinstone, and Roy Twigg, of Oldtown. This committee will take a census of all hatcheries, dealers and other sources of baby chicks supply.

The code was explained by W. H. Rice, poultry specialist, of the University of Maryland, College Park, and Charles H. Hines, of Montgomery County, State coordinator.

Takoma Park Church Will Honor Its Pastor

The congregation of the Takoma Park Presbyterian Church will hold a social at the church tomorrow, at 8 p. m. Recognition will be given the fact that the Rev. R. Paul Schearrer will have completed his fifth year as pastor. A program of speeches, songs and instrumental music will be presented.

The Rev. Mr. Schearrer came to the church from the Endicott, (N. Y.) Presbyterian Church in 1929, succeeding the late Dr. Thomas C. Clark, who was pastor for 25 years.

Falls Church Woman, Who Saw Lincoln Shot Relives That Tragic Night Every February 12

Sarah Russell Eastman Was Only 50 Feet From Martyr.

By Marion Butler.

On a Good Friday afternoon nearly 70 years ago, Abraham Lincoln lounged in a White House chair, his legs stretched out before him, his head cupped in his hands. The formality of the meeting of his Cabinet not yet begun, he was describing to a few early members a dream which had come to him the night before.

Only a few blocks distant on this same afternoon, a pretty, brown-haired debutante sat in one of Washington's fine old residences absorbed in dreams of her own. Daughter of a New England minister, newly arrived in Washington, she had just won permission from her reluctant father to attend the theater that night.

While Lincoln told his ministers how he had seen himself in some strange ship "moving with great rapidity toward a dark and indefinite shore," Sarah N. Russell was dreaming happier dreams of the evening's performance at Ford's Theater on Tenth street, where she would see both President Lincoln and the newly victorious Gen. Grant.

Night Lives in Memory.

Miss Russell, who is Mrs. S. R. Eastman, of Falls Church, Va., is now 86, but her memories of that tragic night are as vivid as ever. She recalls them each year as February 12 brings Lincoln's birthday around again.

Carefully cherished all these years is a rare, old playbill which she received from an usher on the night of that world shaking drama. Her escort of that evening, J. Merrill Ormes, of Washington, an attache of the War Department of the stirring 1860's, had it framed for her half a century ago.

It is dated Ford's Theater, April 14, 1865, the night of Lincoln's assassination, and announces a benefit perfomance of Tom Taylor's comedy, "Our American Cousin," starring Laura Keane, John Dyott and Harry Hawk.

"Every time I look at it, I see the flash of Booth's shot and hear his cry from the stage," says Mrs. Eastman. "I was only 17 then, but I shall never forget it."

On the Good Friday night when Lincoln was shot by John Wilkes Booth, an actor, who, curiously, had played the leading role at this same theater only a month before in the drama, "Apostate," Mrs. Eastman sat not 50 feet away from the Presidential box.

General and Mrs. Grant Absent.

"I sat in the third row of the gallery, then known as the 'dress circle.' The Presidential box was on the right. I could see it distinctly. It was draped with flags, and a center partition, which had once divided it into two boxes, had been removed to provide room for General and Mrs. Grant who, however, did not come."

Packed as the theater was that night by gay parties, celebrating the close of the Civil War with Lee's surrender at Appomattox only five days before, the Presidential party itself was singularly small. Only Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln and Maj. Rathbone and his fiancee, Miss Harris, formed the Presidential group.

Late in entering, they arrived in the middle of the first act, unknown to the intent audience until Laura Keane abandoned her lines to a low curtsey, and the orchestra struck up "Hail to the Chief."

"I was watching for them, and saw them enter the box," Mrs. Eastman says. "And, curiously, all these years I have remembered the lines that were being spoken on the stage at the time. As Lincoln stepped into the box, Lord Dundreary on the stage was asking, 'Why does a dog wag his tail?' Lincoln smiled at the answer, 'Because a tail can't wag the dog.'"

Shot Shatters Comedy.

Lincoln, as always, received his ovation from the crowd very quietly, and the play continued immediately. Gaunt, even in the clothes which were especially made by tailors to conceal his 30-pound loss in weight during the war years, Lincoln watched the play with a tired smile.

A frequent patron of the theater, the management had provided him with the cozy rocking chair which he liked best. He rocked slowly back and forth, intent upon the lines of the comedy, until Booth's pistol suddenly roared forth at the last of the play.

"The shot came at a time when the stage was clear. I think Booth, who knew the stage routine well, had planned it that way," Mrs. Eastman points out. "I saw a burst of flame and smoke come from the box, and heard Mrs. Lincoln scream. Then a man in dark clothes and spurred boots leaped from the railing of the Presidential box to the stage. It was a long jump of about 15 feet, and he caught his spur in folds of the American flag that was draped across the box.

"He crumpled to the floor as he fell, but picked himself up again and dashed into the wings, shouting 'Sic Semper Tyrannis!' I learned later that it was Booth and that he broke his leg in that fall."

Mrs. Eastman will never forget the pandemonium that reigned under the flickering gaslights. Men shouted and cursed, women screamed and fainted, after the first stunned surprise of the act.

"It was not until Mrs. Lincoln called for help, and Maj. Rathbone could be seen with the blood spurting from his arm where Booth had slashed him, when grappled, that the audience really understood what had happened. So theatrical was Booth's mad dash across the stage, brandishing a long knife, that people thought for a while that it was part of the play.

"But I shall never forget Miss Keane's courageous attempts to quiet them when they did realize that Lincoln had been assassinated. She was lovely in a white satin dress, embroidered with roses. When she saw it was impossible to stem the confusion, she hurried up to the gallery to help Mrs. Lincoln."

Saw Lincoln Carried Away.

Perhaps the most cherished recollection which Mrs. Eastman possesses of that night was her last glimpse of the martyred President. She was at the head of the only stairway leading to the gallery when Lincoln's body was carried past, still in the rocking chair which he loved.

"He wasn't three feet away from me," Mrs. Eastman murmered. "His face was as white as his shirt, which the doctors had opened. I could see blood on his collar."

Abraham Lincoln never regained consciousness. He died at 7:22 a. m. the next day at the Peterson theatrical boarding house opposite Ford's Theater. Strangely, it is said that he died on a bed upon which Booth had once thrown himself, smoking his pipe.

Booth himself was shot 12 days later in a flaming Virginia barn. It is said that the bullet entered Booth's head at the identical spot where his shot entered Lincoln's, and that he died at the same hour of the morning.

Mrs. Eastman remembers both Lincoln and Booth clearly—the older man, with his grave and noble features, the younger with his dark handsomeness. Every Sunday morning she passes the scene of that unforgettable night, and always her thought is the same.

"I don't see how anyone could have done that to Lincoln," she says, remembering that bleak April night—69 years ago.

Judge Refiles At Hagerstown

Lynchburg Voters Club Sounds Candidates on City Issues.

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Judge Frank G. Wagaman, Hagerstown, whose term as one of the two associate judges in the Fourth Judicial Circuit of Maryland, expires this year, will be a candidate to succeed himself.

When elected in 1919 on the Republican ticket, he had no opposition. The fourth judicial circuit consists of Garrett, Allegany and Washington Counties.

Lynchburg, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—The Voters Club, a Democratic organization here, will ask candidates for the city council in the April primary to declare themselves on municipal ownership of public utilities, particular reference to be made to the electric light franchise.

The club also will request expressions as to whether salaries should be restored, whether the city tax rate on realty should be reduced and whether councilmen would forego a part of their salaries if elected. The club also wants to know if candidates favor a referendum on bond issues, particularly on $1,500,000 needed if the city decides to reject the application of the Appalachian Electric Power Co. for a franchise.

There are 14 candidates for vacancies to occur September. The election will be held in June.

Remington Bank Doubles Capital

Stockholders Take Action at Election Meeting.

Remington, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Stockholders of the Remington State Bank, meeting to choose officers for 1934, voted to add $15,000 of preferred stock to the capital of the bank, almost doubling the capital, which will total $30,500.

The directors reelected include E. H. Ashby, C. H. Bowen, H. A. Brown, C. B. Chilton, R. A. Fifield, W. G. Martin, W. F. Mattingly and R. L. Willis.

After the stockholders' meeting the directors met and elected the following officers: R. L. Willis, president; C. B. Chilton and W. F. Mattingly, vice presidents; R. A. Fifield, secretary; W. E. Herring, cashier, and John W. Stone, assistant cashier.

Demand for 4-Year High School Ready

Bladensburg Citizens Will Act Tomorrow.

Citizens groups from Bladensburg and nearby territory will present their petitions for a four-year course at Bladensburg Junior High School tomorrow at 10 a. m. before the Prince Georges County Board of Education at Upper Marlboro.

Organizations indorsing the proposal include the Bladensburg Junior High Parent-Teacher Association, the Bladensburg Elementary Parent-Teacher Association, the Greater Bladensburg District Citizens Association and the Decatur Heights Citizens Association. Robert W. McCullough, corporation counsel of Cheverly, will act as spokesman.

Opposition to the plan has been expressed by Nicholas Orem, county superintendent of schools, on the grounds of economy.

Thieves Get Food and Cash.

Thieves forced entrance to a Sanitary Grocery Store at 234 Third street northeast, early yesterday, and escaped with groceries and cigarettes valued at $15. A rear door was smashed, police were told.

Cumberland Loses Pennsy Service

Passenger Connection Ends After 60 Years.

Cumberland, Md., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—After more than 60 years' service, the Pennsylvania railroad today discontinued running passenger trains into Cumberland. Discontinuance is to save trackage charges and is prompted by the further fact that trains were operated at a loss, due to automobile and bus competition.

Trains ran between Altoona and this city. Hereafter they will be operated daily only between Altoona and State Line, Pa., 7 miles north of here, making a connection at Hyndman, Pa., 14 miles north, with Baltimore & Ohio local trains. Daily freight service is not affected.

A passenger en route from Altoona or Bedford to Cumberland will change to the Baltimore & Ohio at Hyndman to reach here. Passengers destined to Bedford or Altoona from Cumberland will buy tickets at the Baltimore & Ohio station here and change at Hyndman for the Pennsylvania train. The Pennsylvania train hereafter will "turn" at State Line, instead of here.

Literary Society Plans Celebration

Randolph-Macon Group to Observe 101st Birthday.

Ashland, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Completion of the first year of its second century will be celebrated at a George Washington birthday program of the Washington Literary Society of Randolph-Macon College, which has the longest record of continuous existence of any society in a Southern college.

Dr. J. N. Holman, president of Emory and Henry College and an outstanding Southern educator, will deliver the celebration address in the college chapel, at 8:15 p. m.

A banquet will be held at the Henry Clay Hotel and the society will hold its annual secret session. Joseph W. Bland is president of the society.

Advice for Taxpayers.

Meetings to assist taxpayers in filling out their income tax returns will be held at Upper Marleboro, February 23 and 24; Hyattsville, February 26 and 27, and Laurel, February 27 and 28, it was announced by J. Enos Ray, collector for the Maryland district.

Scouts to 'Boss' Charlottesville Today; 'No School' Their Edict

Regular Officials to Read Mail, Then Make Way for Boy Rulers.

Charlottesville, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Boy Scouts will run the city of Charlottesville tomorrow. They will take over the reins of office at 10 a. m., just giving the adult administration enough time to read the mail and get out.

The Boy Scouts yesterday selected Bobbie Coleman mayor on a platform containing a "no school" plank, and gave him the assistance of four juvenile councilmen, Elmer Bishop, Henry Collier, Bernard Dirzulaitis and Douglas Hamm.

Arthur Tuthill will be police judge; Jack Jones, Commonwealth's attorney; Roe Jarman, commissioner of revenue, and Philip Peyton, city treasurer.

William Atkinson will be the scourage of evildoers on that day, having won the position of police chief from Frank Hartman. But Bill Hartman came right back and was chosen city manager.

Sanky Hall will be fire chief and Jack Mahahan city attorney.

The Scouts have been given instructions in their duties by S. F. Hamm, Gilbert Campbell and City Manager Seth Burnley. They heard a special sermon preached for them at the Presbyterian Church tonight by the Rev. Dwight Chalmers.

Harrisonburg, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Mayor Ward Swank presented awards to six troops at the first court of honor of Rockingham and Harrisonburg Boy Scouts here at the Methodist Church.

Elkton, Bridgewater, Dayton and Broadway troops were represented.

The Scouts assembled at the Main street school yesterday to hear the National Boy Scout week program broadcast. Tonight they attended the annual Boy Scout sermon at Muhlenberg Lutheran Church. The Rev. M. L. Minnick will be the speaker.

A Contest Of Wits.

The dispute between the former Assistant Secretary of Commerce, William P. MacCracken, and the Senate threatens to degenerate into a contest of wits providing an amusing public spectacle. Such an outcome would be deplorable for a number of reasons. The major controversy is of too great importance to be lost to sight in delighted contemplation of the maneuvers of Mr. MacCracken, who seeks to escape being brought before the Senate until a writ taking him from its jurisdiction can be obtained. The Senate, too, is pursuing a strategic campaign to obtain custody of Mr. MacCracken and prevent him from instituting a contest in the courts to determine his rights.

The entire proceeding is undignified and is taking on the aspects of a comedy which tends to discredit both accused and accuser. The accused, moreover, is placed in the agreeable position of being able to present himself as a defender of constitutional rights against arbitrary senatorial action. The Senate, by seeking to evade the challenge offered to it, creates a suspicion in the public mind that it is uncertain of the limits of its own authority.

In view of the differences of opinion and conflicting precedents bearing upon the questions raised by Mr. MacCracken's counsel, the Senate should welcome a court decision in the present case. Nothing is to be gained by sparring for advantage or asserting a dubious right to "punish" Mr. MacCracken should he be proved guilty of contempt.

Unmoved By Winds.

"I believe what I believe," might have been said of Secretary of State Cordell Hull. His address Saturday before the National Press Club demonstrates again that no winds that blow can shake him from his adherence to the philosophy which has evolved from his thinking and experience.

It is essentially a philosophy of cooperation, based on a belief in the fundamental decency of human beings and in the faith that they have an unlimited capacity for honest and friendly response to honest and friendly overtures. To Mr. Hull, diplomacy is no matter of gilded trappings and high-sounding phrases; its purpose, at bottom, is to serve as a machinery by which the peoples of the earth may understand each other and live peacefully and happily together. The Secretary's achievements at Montevideo gave a striking vindication of the efficacy of a simple, sincere, friendly, and personally humble approach to a settlement of international problems.

Since Mr. Hull does believe passionately in world cooperation, whether for peace or for trade, it is not surprising to those who have followed his career to find him reasserting convictions that have lost caste, at least for the moment, at home as well as throughout the world. With the tide of nationalism at its highest, he tells America that for the world to compartment itself is to commit suicide. With trade barriers already at skyscraper heights, and the tendency to raise them even further, he warns the world that the barriers are choking the life blood of civilization and they must come down. He does not scold, he does not blame, but with a stubborn, immovable conviction that does not sway with the winds of popular passion, he gives solemn warning that we must come back to paths we have left.

Even those who disagree with such a man are forced to recognize that conviction, rather than opportunism, governs him. The country long ago came to know that the strength of Mr. Hull's conviction was buttressed by the force of his character.

Why The Delay?

Continued delay in the confirmation of Miss Fay L. Bentley as judge of the District Juvenile Court is regrettable. Rather extensive hearings as to her qualifications have been held before a Senate committee. No valid objection to her nomination appears to have been raised. Yet the committee is still withholding its indorsement.

Miss Bentley appeared before the committee Saturday to give an account of herself. Although she had been invited to testify concerning her experience and qualifications, the committee decided that it would not be able to hear her. Another date has been set for her appearance. Of course, it is the duty of the Senate to investigate the fitness of nominees to important offices. But it is entirely unnecessary for senatorial committees to be so discourteous in the performance of that duty.

A group of lawyers has opposed Miss Bentley's confirmation on the ground that her experience in the legal profession has been limited. Of course, modern juvenile courts are more concerned with social welfare than legal technicalities. In selecting a judge for such an important position the interests of the children who are taken before the court must take precedence over the wishes of attorneys who practice before it.

The issue is so clear-cut that further delay on the part of the committee would seem to call for an explanation.

Abraham Lincoln.

In the 69 years since he died in the little red house on Tenth street, Lincoln has been deified and anathematized, by turns, depending upon the prejudices and the fervor of those who regarded him. On this day, the 125th anniversary of his birth, we know, in the light of calmer judgment and a more complete picture of his background, that he was neither saint nor sinner, fanatic nor genius, but a common man, moved by forces which move all of us and inspired by ambitions shared by ambitious men.

More than ever, though, Lincoln becomes the American to whom all Americans look. The perspective of history has not diminished his stature nor assigned him to the role of one whose character and importance were unduly exaggerated because he was chief executive in a time when passions swirled destructively, like cyclones, through the country. On the contrary, history has served to establish the integrity of the claim that he was one of the tallest among the tall men in the American procession.

One who seeks a definitive quality for Lincoln's greatness will not find it. He lacked bitterness in the face of raging partisanships. He behaved generously, even chivalrously, toward the "kid glove" politicians who regarded him as a country bumpkin and were contemptuous of him when he came to the Presidency. He was patient, even to a fault, with the irritating and the unworthy. He had common sense in a rich endowment, and humility rarely equaled in a man upon whom such tremendous powers were bestowed. All these, and other qualities, he possessed, but two are particularly apposite for discussion as we observe his anniversary.

Lincoln had an overwhelming faith in the "right-mindedness of the people" and in their capacity to govern themselves. But the bed-rock of that faith was his own rugged honesty. He threw up a case when, in the middle of a trial, he learned that his client had deceived him, and walked out of the courtroom, telling the judge he was going to wash his unclean hands. Again, refusing a fee and a case which he felt he could have won, he said, "If it is not morally right, it is not legally right." When his friends warned him not to make the Freeport speech, he said, "If it is decreed that I should go down because of this speech, then let me go down linked to the truth." The works of Herndon, his last law partner, and Nicolay and Hay, his secretaries in the Presidency, multiply instances in which he met situations and solved them, not by genius, but by direct and uncompromising fidelity to the truth and public good.

One who seeks to rationalize the national devotion to the memory of Lincoln might conclude that, after all, not the least element in it is our essential fidelity to that public morality and honesty which he grandly exemplified. We run away from our moorings to shout for demagogues. We listen to the siren voices of charlatans. We tolerate quacks with their frequently dishonest nostrums, and even, in mistaken judgment, occasionally elevate crooks to high places. Our vision is often defective, but our instincts are usually right, justifying Lincoln's faith in the right-mindedness of American people. We reserve our special admiration and niches in history only for such men as Lincoln, who illustrate the homely and rugged virtues which built this Nation and made it great.

Vaguely and perhaps subconsciously, we know that the institutions of government which our "fathers brought forth on this continent" can survive and serve a free people only if they are clean.

The Gold Rush.

The rush of gold toward these shores which started with the devaluation of the dollar and the establishment of a buying price of $35 for the imported metal, is spectacular by reason of its character rather than its volume, although receipts have been heavy. The disordered state of world finance prior to and following the disturbances created by the European crisis of 1931; British abandonment of the gold standard, and our own panic all resulted in abnormally large transfers of gold into and out of the United States in the period preceding our departure from gold.

The present gold movement, however, is not at all like its predecessors. It presents the aspect of a game played against time and fate, with a view to capturing the ephemeral profits of the existing spread between the foreign and domestic dollar price of gold. It is realized that these price differences will vanish as the gold-buying policy of the stabilization fund becomes effective. Then, too, there is fear that gold shipments may be prevented and gold owned be impounded should France declare a gold embargo.

Hence the frantic haste to ship gold to the United States takes on the aspect of a "rush" in a very literal sense of that word. Airplanes have been pressed into service to bring gold out of a supposedly dangerous continental area to British territory, where it is believed to be safe from molestation until it can be dispatched to its ultimate destination. Shipping facilities have become congested, insurance rates have been increased sharply and limitations have been placed upon the amount of gold carried on a single voyage.

A gold flight of this kind seems much more adventurous and individualistic than the extensive gold movements to which the world has become accustomed as a result of the post-war flight of capital from country to country seeking escape from currency depreciation or trying to find refuge from political disorders. The scope and duration of the present movement remain shrouded in mystery. Even when the profits due to the spread between foreign and domestic gold prices are eliminated, American capital held abroad may continue to be repatriated and foreigners seeking speculative employment of their funds may help to swell the demand for dollars and assist a gold inflow to the United States.

Thus the present rush may be the advance guard of a movement which would add many millions to the already large gold stocks of the United States. In view of the fact that excessive concentration of gold in the United States and France has been regarded as an obstruction to the restoration of normal trade and monetary relations, and in view of the admitted need for a more equitable distribution of world gold stocks, there is a disturbing aspect to this process of continued acquisition.

PWA Closes A Chapter.

Activities of the Public Works Administration have been overshadowed in recent months by the more spectacular performance of the CWA. Secretary Ickes' announcement that the first stage of the public works program has been completed and that attention will now be concentrated upon the actual construction of projects for which funds have been allotted, serves to reemphasize the importance of the PWA in the Administration's recovery plan.

Congress appropriated $3,200,000,000 for public works last spring, but less than 10 per cent of that sum has been spent. The PWA allotted its entire fund in about six months. Many safeguards were thrown about its expenditure, however, and it appears that funds have not been drawn from the Treasury as rapidly as was expected. Secretary Ickes laid down rules that all projects financed by the PWA should be "socially desirable in the sense of contributing something of value to the equipment of the community and should not be a mere makeshift to supply work." Projects also have been scrutinized from the standpoints of engineering, legal and economic feasibility. Indications are that the PWA has made a diligent effort to guard against graft and waste in the expenditure of this vast sum.

While actual construction work has moved slowly applications for PWA funds have accumulated at a rapid rate. If the original appropriation should be doubled, it would not finance all of the projects submitted by Federal, State and local governments. Secretary Ickes has closed the door to any new projects in order to save States and municipalities the expense of preparing plans for undertakings that have little or no chance of being financed by the PWA. Some projects now on the waiting list may be approved, however, because quite a number of governmental units to which money has been allotted are not taking advantage of it.

Because of the time required to get a program of this kind into full swing, industry and labor may not feel the full effects of the public works expenditures for some time to come. In this respect the PWA stands out in sharp contrast to the CWA. The latter agency had an allotment of only $400,000,000 when its activities began, but it spent nearly half that sum in the single month of January. Its one outstanding objective is the creation of jobs. The PWA began with an appropriation of $3,200,000,000, but in eight months it has spent only $298,000,000. In addition to making work, the PWA is endeavoring to give the Nation permanent improvements in return for the fund it is disposing.

If Secretary Ickes can accelerate the letting of contracts and actual construction on projects that have been approved, his efforts may go a long way toward quieting the clamor for extension of the CWA when the current appropriation for that purpose has been exhausted.

Shipping Rivalries.

The British treasury is preparing to advance funds on liberal terms to the new shipping merger created by a combination of the Cunard and White Star lines. This merger has been facilitated by government advances in return for promises that the merged lines will remain under British control, another indication of the growth of that universal nationalistic spirit which subordinates considerations of cost to political outlook. The result is that international rivalries in the construction of giant liners, and a desire to outdistance the merchant marines of other countries, are keenest at a time when the shipping industry is suffering from the overabundance of carrying facilities.

Although shipping obviously depends on international trade, there seems to be no desire to view the shipping problem from a world point of view. On the contrary, government subsidies to hasten growth are urged most strongly when private enterprise finds it unprofitable to enter the field. The result is that one superliner begets another superliner, and commercial shipping companies, like navies, become the concern of governments—inclined to measure their worth in terms of comparative tonnage instead of commercial value.

The Naive Nazis.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The proposed religious cult based on Nordic myths, traditions and racial ideals is in full accord with the awakened Nazi spirit which makes the whole cosmic scheme of things Germanocentric. The political, economic, social and spiritual ideal would be depicted in terms of that race which deems itself the foremost member of the human family. The old rallying cry, "Das Vaterland Uber Alles," being defeated in outward semblance has taken on an inner meaning.

It is amusing to see how this anti-Semitic propaganda is copying the tribal religion of the very race it holds in despite. Struggling to free themselves from the leading strings of the Hebrew Bible these guileless copyists find themselves more deeply entangled in the meshes of its spiritual genius. Under the impact of Christianity the primitive Jewish religion has outgrown its primitive tribal conceit and expanded to the fulfillment of the prophecy vouchsafed its father and founder, "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blest."

The whole liberal trend of the thought and culture of the age is toward the spiritual unity of mankind. The brotherhood of man and the universality of culture constitute what Tennyson deems "that one, far-off, divine event, to which the whole creation moves." But in this day and hour when the sun has risen so high above the horizon of humanity the world is astounded by this startling and jarring note from the banks of the Rhine. The tough Teutonic spirit harks back to the discarded conceit of the ancient Jew, who believed that his race constituted God's chosen people. The copyist compliments the one who sets the copy although he affects to despise him.

But, after all, it must be said for these German zealots that they possess the brutal logic of their philosophy. They prosecute the Jews with holy zeal, just as the Jews once persecuted the Gentiles. To use the language of Kipling, they do not scruple to "to push the logic to its ultimate conclusion in unmitigated act." This brutal frankness gives them the advantage over traditional and orthodox Christians whose wide margin between profession and performance brings down upon their heads the reproach of insincerity and inconsistency. Orthodox Christianity professes belief in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Consistency forbids all those who profess this creed from practicing or observing distinctions and discriminations based on flesh and blood.

Man is all but incurably anthropomorphic and is prone to make his God in his own image and likeness. Man will bow down and worship the graven image of his own making, whether fashioned out of stone or brass or depicted by the imagination. The European makes his God white, the Chinaman yellow, the Hindoo brown, the Negro black and the Indian red. High qualities are imputed to figure, form and face. Virtue can hardly be disassociated from visage. It is a hard pull against human nature to divorce the two, but this is what normal orthodox Christianity engages to do. The margin between profession and practice invites the charge of hypocrisy. And yet the whole trend of things is toward this ideal. Christianity can not abandon this goal without stultifying its conscience. It is reserved for the unabashed Teuton nation to have a racial ideal which points in the opposite direction.

National Guard Armory.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was much interested in the letter in The Post of February 6 regarding the old Pension Office Building.

When the G. A. R. Hall on Pennsylvania avenue was torn down, the G. A. R. and affiliated societies asked for the Pension Building, but red tape let the claim die, and the Government used it for a storehouse for odds and ends. Now it seems very appropriate to take it for an armory. The beautiful frieze on each side, representing the Army—Artillery, Cavalry and Infantry—too grand to be destroyed, makes it singularly appropriate.

A fine little city of 40,000 inhabitants half way between New York and Buffalo, built an armory for the National Guard battery and regiment, at the cost of $80,000—$2 for each inhabitant. And this city, the capital of the richest country on earth, to which "all roads lead," has no armory. One little town just east of this city has beaten us to it.

The Wings of Icarus.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Unless there is some inconsistency in references, it seems that there is a trace of error in your editorial, "In The Path of Icarus," referring to the Greek myth, you pointed out that "Icarus, the son of Daedalus fled from Crete to escape the wrath of Minos. With his father the young man is fabled to have ascended into the stratosphere on wings fastened to his body by wax. In defiance of the father's warning, Icarus flew too near the sun. He lost his wings, when the heat melted their wax attachments and fell into the Aegan Sea between the Cylades and Caria, since known as the Icarian Sea."

It is narrated from another source that the son was unusually beloved by the father, in fact, too much. He attempted to give the boy anything for which he might wish. It is related that Icarus was amply supplied with everything except a pair of wings; his father, of course, set out to procure these for him. With wax they were attached to the son's body. Upon flying too near the sun, he lost his wings due to the melting of the wax by the heat; his destruction obviously was subsequent. At this point, it is said, the father exclaimed, "Oh, that they were fastened 'sine cera' (without wax)!" From this phrase we get the derivation or etymology of not an infrequently used word, "Sincere." CLAUDE D. BLACK.

Galt's Name and Good Will.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In an age of materialism, with everyone—perforce, more or less, "taking thought for the morrow"—the gracious act of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, widow of the war President, in presenting the good will and name of her jewelry business to trusted and long-tried employes of this reputable firm should not be passed unnoticed.

When Mrs. Wilson announced some time ago that the firm was to be dissolved so that the business ideals on which it was founded might not be set aside by new owners a wave of regret swept over the city. Galt & Co. had represented honorable trading to hundreds of our citizens over a long period of years.

Now Mrs. Wilson has found the present happy solution and the firm will continue. Her generous action is an augury of that Utopia of industrialism when employe and employer will build great business houses based on the mutual good of both elements in its construction—those who own the establishments and the ones who give the fruits of their willing labor to making its achievements possible.

That homely sentiment of George Herbert—

"Who sweeps a room as by God's Law Makes both that and the action fine"

—embodies, after all, the epitome of what labor, in its best sense, should mean. M. S.

"The Future of Manchukuo."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: After reading Mr. Rea's article "The Future of Manchukuo," appearing in The Post of February 6, I am driven to offer the following criticism:

1. Mr. Rea says, "* * * I am also convinced that Japan will never fight the United States unless we force the war upon her." * * * It is undeniable that many Japanese officials, subordinates and writers have repeatedly stated that Japan does not fear any country, and is already preparing for war with the U. S. S. R. or the United States. One single instance would suffice to verify this, namely, on January 11, 1934, Admiral Nobumasa Suetsugu, commander-in-chief of the imperial combined fleets of Japan said, "Japan is already preparing for war with the United States and the time is past when the white race considers itself superior to the yellow one." (Here I suppose the "yellow race" particularly refers to the Japanese.)

2. If bombardments of Manchuria, Shanghai and Jehol were simply "self-defense" but not "aggression," I think that one must create totally new principles of international law and comity in order to help Japan to find out some "excuse" for herself. If the "fait accompli" would be considered "legal" then the Kellogg pact and the nine power treaty would become a mere scrap of paper, and America's nonrecognition policy would be utterly futile.

3. If the puppet state is not seeking for recognition, I do not understand why Japan as well as the so-called Manchukuo are making so many diplomatic gestures to Western countries and directing propaganda to that end.

4. Mr. Rea says, "* * * the Stimson doctrine merely denies to the 30,000,000 people of that country their right to rebel—to set up their own government * * *." I say that Henry Pu Yi, the 28-year-old former emperor of the Manchus is no more than a rubber stamp in the court of Manchuria. The Japanese advisers and officials at the privy council in Manchuria and in Tokyo are the real masters of the puppet.

This does not represent a complete picture, but certainly a more real understanding.

Attention, Mr. Griffith!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been watching the baseball items all winter to catch some item that would convey a "ray of hope" to the "Base Ball Fan," who is equipped 100 per cent so far as interest and enthusiasm is concerned, but does not have the "spondulix" to pay $1.10 for a ticket.

A baseball fan is one who tries to go to every game and keep up with the records and achievements of each and every player, who talks baseball when he is asleep as well as when he is awake—one who is completely nutty and one who offers no apologies for his happy condition. But just stop and reflect how much it will cost one to go and see all the games. Practically 150 games at $1.10 equals $165 for the whole season.

I will venture to assert that there are not over 500 such fans in the whole territory that support the Washington team. Now then if Mr. Griffith and the powers that be, would recognize the fact that there is a depression in sporting affairs as well as there is in other lines of human endeavor and take wise steps to meet the situation, he and his coworkers would be able to get along without the use of any red ink.

Establish the price of admission at 75 cents, 50 cents and 25 cents plus the 10 per cent tax. I am sure that the sporting public would more than meet him half way and that the attendence would increase 300 per cent or more.

I would suggest that you prepare some sort of a ballot, by which the sporting public could express their opinion by a vote.

Last year I spent $19.50, not including my world series ticket for baseball. If the price of admission is reduced as I have suggested, I will spend this coming season four times as much, otherwise I will read the report as your reporter sees it.

Lincoln's Ill Omen

Dickens' Letter Tells of President's Concern on Assassination Day.

Charles Dickens visited America on lecture tours in 1842 and 1868, visiting Washington on each occasion. On the second visit he was received by President Andrew Johnson. On the anniversary of Lincoln's birthday this personal letter of Charles Dickens to his closest friend and biographer, John Forster, then in London, is of unusual interest. It has been sent to The Post by Prof. Otto Torney Simon.

Washington, Feb. 4, 1868.

I am going tomorrow to see the President, who has sent for me twice. I dined with Charles Sumner last Sunday against my rule; and as I stipulated for no party, Mr. Secretary Stanton was the only other guest, besides my own secretary. We fell into a very interesting conversation after dinner. Then Mr. Stanton told me a curious little story which will form the remainder of this short letter.

On the afternoon of the day on which the President was shot, there was a Cabinet Council, at which he presided. Secretary Stanton arrived late. Mr. Stanton then noticed with great surprise that the President sat with an air of dignity in his chair, instead of lolling about in it, and that instead of telling irrelevant stories, he was grave and calm.

Mr. Stanton, on leaving the council with the Attorney General, said to him: "That is the most satisfactory cabinet meeting I have attended for many a long day! What an extraordinary change in Mr. Lincoln!" The Attorney General replied: "We all saw it before you came in. While we were waiting for you, he said, with his chin down on his breast, 'Gentlemen, something very extraordinary is going to happen, and that very soon.'"

To which the Attorney General had observed: "Something good, sir, I hope?" when the President answered very gravely: "I don't know, I don't know. But it will happen, and shortly, too!"

As they were all impressed by his manner, the Attorney General took him up again: "Have you received any information, sir, not yet disclosed to us?" "No," answered the President, "but I have had a dream. And I have now had the same dream three times. Once, on the night preceding the battle of Bull Run. Once, on the night preceding the battle (naming a battle also not favorable to the North.) His chin sank on his breast again, and he sat reflecting.

"Might we ask the nature of this dream, sir?" said the Attorney General. "Well," replied the President without lifting his head or changing his attitude, "I am on a great broad rolling river—and I am in a boat—and I drift—and I drift!—but this is not business"—suddenly raising his face and looking around the table, as Mr. Stanton entered, "let us proceed to business, gentlemen."

Mr. Stanton and the Attorney General said, as they walked on together, it would be curious to notice whether anything ensued on this; and they agreed to notice.

He was shot that night.

Magazines for Children.

When I was a child, one of the most excellent and most popular juvenile magazines in the world was the British Chatterbox, which had an immense circulation in America. It had many stories of school life, and many pictures. I remember particularly well one story of school life in England, where two rival societies were formed, called respectively the Union Jacks and the Brickbats. Accordingly, when I was 8 years old, at the Webster School in New Haven, Conn., I organized the Union Jacks and told another boy he could start the Brickbats. This was very bad psychology: I should have known that to the average small boy the name Brickbats would make a far stronger appeal than the meaningless Union Jacks. When our respective forces met after school to have a fight, they outnumbered us 10 to 1, and we were decisively defeated.

A splendid magazine in the United States, very popular after the Civil War, was Our Young Folks. T. B. Aldrich's "Story of a Bad Boy" appeared serially in it, and deservedly attracted wide attention. There were many other pieces that, published later in book form, belong to American literature.

I remember, also, the general excitement among boys and girls when the first number of St. Nicholas appeared. We took that for years, and always had the numbers bound and preserved at the end of every year. We also took what was for a time a keen rival of St. Nicholas, a magazine called Wide Awake.

The Youth's Companion, in Boston, had an enormous circulation, and I think, though I am not sure, that it was the first American periodical to pay large sums to distinguished contributors from Europe and America. I know that the editors always went after big game, and that Gladstone was a contributor.

Harper's Young People came later, and got Alonzo Stagg, then at the height of his fame as a college baseball pitcher, to write a series of articles.

No End of Books

House of Cards.

We have, in Phyllis Bentley's "A Modern Tragedy" (MacMillan, $2.50), a novel strangely reminiscent of Dreiser's "American Tragedy." There is the same poor young man whose eye brightens at a delight beyond his means and station, whose arms reach out for it, who is forced to compound with conscience, and who in the end faces Nemesis—a jury trial. Miss Bentley is equally serious, if by no means so long-drawn and heavy-motioned as Dreiser. Both of them draw up indictments of society which are passionately in earnest.

But where Dreiser was filled with a kind of diffuse anger against a world which could allow sensitivity to go unrewarded, Miss Bentley is pointed and specific. She summons all the complex misery of a Yorkshire milltown in the depression to prove that "not till men have learned the mutual love which casts out fear can the economic problem be solved." This, explicit as the text of a sermon, is her thesis. To say that Miss Bentley has gone to great effort in demonstrating the only self-evident dictum on a society—that it depends on the quality of the men in it—may not be gracious but remains plain.

Walter Haigh worked in a West Riding textile mill. He was bright-faced when he saw Elaine, granddaughter of the wealthiest mill-owner. He was honest when he first met Leonard Tasker, wily and ambitious entrepreneur in the spinning industry. But when he joined you understand, to gain wealth and forces with Tasker and connived at one chicanery after another—all, consequent favor in Elaine's eyes—the honesty vanished and the bright look with it. Yet both desires were realized. When the depression brought to a crisis the partners' precarious schemes, the collapse was immediate. From fraud and thievery, a circle of catastrophe widened over the town.

This interconnection of one man's greed with another man's daily bread helps Miss Bentley to picture the whole life of an industrial center—owners and laborers, agitators and the unemployed. In many ways, the book is a pure sociological document. Yet, so able a story-teller as Miss Bentley could not escape giving us the suspense and excitement which the clashes of her material provide. The tale is high drama, high tragedy, impressively recited. Of the characters I think you will like best Walter's sister Rosamond, who analyzes her actions, calls on her Nordic blood, and quotes Shakespeare to herself at tense moments, and is very charming for all that.

The Policeman's Lot.

As Sir William Gilbert's chorus suggests, the unhappiness of policemen lies in their sympathies. "Our feelings we with difficulty smother, when constabulary duty's to be done."

To this, I am sure, Capt. Cornelius W. Willemse, of the New York Detective Bureau, would be the first to subscribe. For all through the story of his life as a guardian of the law, "A Cop Remembers" (Dutton, $3), runs a thread of sympathy for the thousands of "felons, burglars, cutthroats," and other malefactors who have passed before his eyes. Studying them, learning their backgrounds, he knows very well how thin is that line separating the legal goats from the illegal sheep—across which, from the safe side, Samuel Butler once remarked: "There, but for the grace of God, go I."

And yet, in spite of all the depressing and sometimes gruesome stories which Capt. Willemse relates in this book, I can not think that he would call his lot unhappy. Behind the pages stands the figure of a smiling, square, ruddy, grizzled Hollander. He has kept his kindliness, good humor and stout heart to the end, and there is no regret in him.

Capt. Willemse ran away from his home in Rotterdam as a boy, came to America as cook's helper on a square-rigger, lived a hard life for a while at one job after another, and in 1900 joined the force. The experiences he met in his long police career—everything from "picking up" bums on the Bowery to solving murders—are narrated simply and tellingly. But the book is not all pure incident. Capt. Willemse has many things to say on kidnaping, reform methods, capital punishment, what to do with the man who steals a starving family, and other topics close at hand to his profession. He gives his views on a number of well-known figures whom he has met, and is most outspoken in praise of the famous Dr. Charles Norris, chief medical examiner of New York. There are graphs of the murder and suicide rates, discussions of police technique now and 30 years ago, even explicit advice to young policemen.

Yet you will enjoy the book most as the picture of a man unspoiled by a most trying profession. For his life story reveals a natural-born gentleman.

In the Margin.

Two new prefaces in typically Shavian manner are included in the new volume of Shaw plays to be released by Dodd Mead on February 15. The first deals with the possibilities of democracy under present-day autocratic governments, and the second with the extermination of undesirables and incompatibles in society. Mr. Shaw also rewrites the Pontius Pilate debate with Christ on the subject of "What Is Truth?" remolding the argument nearer to his heart's desire.

Rexford Guy Tugwell and H. C. Hill, in their new book, "Our Economic Society," says: "Years will pass before the full meaning of the depression starting in 1929 can be determined. But we already know that if one-third of our population lived on the poverty level in 1929, the number of urban and rural families on this level had risen in 1933 to approximately 15,000,000 families, or over one-half of the entire population of the United States. And of these 15,000,000 families from 5,000,000 to 10,000,000 were probably destitute."

"Our Economic Society," a full discussion of American levels of living that gives the factual background for the New Deal, will be published by Harcourt Brace on February 15.

Doumergue Tells the World France Fears No Revolution

Premier Says Frenchmen Will Place Common Interest Above All.

(Editor's note:—Premier Gaston Doumergue in a personal message to the world on the troubled affairs of France, seeks in the following exclusive statement to calm fears of revolution.)

By Richard D. McMillan.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press; reproduction in all or in part forbidden in all countries.)

Paris, Feb. 11 (U.P.).—Premier Gaston Doumergue assured the world today that there was no danger of revolution in France.

The elderly former president, in an exclusive statement to the United Press, declared he was confident the French people would place the Republic's "common interest above everything else."

His statement follows:

"Friends of France have been, I know, painfully moved by the events of recent days, of which certain reports abroad have been regrettably exaggerated as to their gravity.

"I am of the conviction that after these difficult moments, all Frenchmen now are placing our common interest above everything else and will support their government in its great effort to calm passions, which is our immediate aim.

"The economic crisis existing in the entire world is without precedent in its rigor; people suffer; in many hearts faith in the future is shaken.

"Just as the duty of any Government head is to strengthen peace between nations, the task of all citizens in these difficult hours is to contribute actively in his country to the moral union of all men in good will."

Amidst the stress of Sunday-long conversations with members of his "super-cabinet," Doumergue received me in his office in the Quai D'Orsay, occupied for years by the late Aristide Briand, another apostle of peace long associated with Doumergue in political leadership of France.

It was the first newspaperman to be received individually by the premier since he answered the desperate call from President Albert Lebrun and took over the reins of government, dropped by Edouard Daladier during hysterical rioting in the streets of Paris last week. He came into office to find a populace raging with the lust for vengeance against an allegedly corrupt government, and demanding a clean sweep in high places.

The gray-haired, 71-year-old premier was smiling as usual when I entered his office across the Seine from the historic Place de la Concorde, scene of civil strife last week.

Doumergue, despite his years, was alert and energetic. He showed not the slightest sign of fatigue from his arduous days of cabinet-making—a task which he thought he had forever laid aside when he relinquished the presidency two years ago and retired to southern France.

Armchair Tour Of France Next In Post Series

Thirteenth Lecture Will Be Given Tomorrow Night, Stressing Paris.

The thirteenth in a series of 20 illustrated travel talks being presented at the Masonic Auditorium, New York avenue at Thirteenth street northwest, will be given tomorrow night at 8:15 o'clock by Clayton T. Morgan, who will tell the story of France, with particular emphasis upon the city of Paris. The talk will be supplemented by motion pictures and stereopticon views in color.

The lectures are sponsored by The Washington Post to give its readers an interesting and informative background for the news of international affairs presented daily in its columns through the Associated Press and other news-gathering facilities. While devoted primarily to the scenic attractions of the various countries, each lecture also presents an historical resume, an intimate glimpse of native customs, an analysis of present economic and political situations and a view of art treasures.

Because of the comprehensive coverage of French affairs that will be given by Mr. Morgan tomorrow night, together with the significant developments of the last week in France, the subject is expected to prove one of the most popular in the series.

Tickets will be on sale at the Masonic Auditorium box office, beginning at 7 p. m. tomorrow, at 25 cents each.

Dragons and Orchids Adorn Throne for 'Son of Heaven'

Hsinking (Changchun), Manchukuo, Feb. 11 (AP).—A throne, built of carved ebony, has been installed in the palace here for the enthronement of Henry Pu-Yi March 1 as Emperor of Manchukuo.

Embellished by imperial dragons and orchids, the throne rests on a dais o fthree steps ,surmounted by a gilded stucco canopy.

For the secular portion of the ceremonies the emperor will wear a blue double-breasted field marshal's uniform. Since Oriental monarchs are enthroned, not crowned, Pu-Yi will wear instead of a crown a Napoleonic black helmet with a huge yellow plume.

While making sacrificial obligations to heaven, the emperor will be dressed in a yellow robe fashioned after a Ching dynasty model.

No correspondents will be allowed to witness the 26-year-old ruler and "son of heaven" communing with divinity, but may see a dress rehearsal a few days before the enthronement with a stuffed manikin representing the emperor.

Five thousand applications have been received from persons seeking to witness the ceremonies, but the enthronement room accommodates only 200.

German Carnival Ridicules League

Versailles Pact Satirized by Funeral Cortege.

Munich, Germany, Feb. 11 (AP).—The League of Nations and disarmament were treated heavily to popular derision as a feature of a two-mile long carnival procession here today.

A jackass and a camel symbolized those nations represented as still believing in the league. Part of the procession was devoted to a funeral cortege for the Treaty of Versailles.

The past regime was satirized by a number of "Marxist" figures in red, while Jewish emigrants were shown at work producing atrocity stories in the shape of monster toads, which were slain with "The Pen of Truth."

MacCracken Freed as U. S. Avoids Arrest

and coat in the office and went to the office of Senator Black, who is in charge of the air mail investigation.

Shortly afterward, a messenger called for Jurnye's hat and coat. MacCracken, sensing that his "jailor" might attempt to escape, was undetermined whether to stay in the office or to follow the hat and coat. However, he was "ordered" to stay in the office and he stayed.

Jurney did not escape—not yet. He returned to the office and "ordered" or "invited" MacCracken to go along with him. They emerged from the building and stood on the sidewalk. An automobile was parked at the curb.

Two men approached. Jurney greeted them and introduced them to MacCracken. They were United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett and Assistant United States Attorney Harry L. Underwood.

Jurney Jumps In, Escapes.

"I am pleased to meet you," said Garnett, suddenly stepping into the automobile. He was followed quickly by Underwood and Jurney. The doors slammed and the car moved off.

Somewhat dazed, MacCracken stood on the sidewalk. His "jailer" had escaped.

The hearing today will be beghue, who issued the writ of habeas corpus, following the MacCracken "arrest" Saturday night. Jurney will appear in court as defendant in the habeas corpus action. He will be represented by Garnett. McCracken will be represented by Hogan.

"MacCracken has not been arrested," Jurney said following his "escape" and a subsequent conference with Garnett. "I refused to arrest him because the warrant for his orrest was locked up in a safe in my office. What is more, I would not arrest him until I could take him immediately before the bar of the Senate. The Senate wasn't in session."

"Taint So," Says Hogan.

MacCracken was arrested," Hogan said last night. "Jurney was ordered by the Senate to bring MacCracken in forthwith. As soon as that order was issued last week, Jurney started looking for him vesy much forthwith. Then when the Senate recessed, he lost all interest and even refused to arrest him when he demanded to be arrested. Despite the refusal, he was legally arrested.

"What is more, MacCracken was released on a writ of habeas rorpus. The writ was served immediately after the arrest Saturday night. Instead of releasing MacCracken immediately, Jurney waited until today to release him. Jurney's escape in the automobile legally constituted a release.

"I don't see that there is anything more for us to do. My client was arrested and now he is free. What more could we ask? There is nothiny for the court to do now but drop the whole thing."

Senator Black said he would not comment on the situation pending action of the court today. He contends that MacCracken never has been arrested. Whether MacCracken will be served with the warrant this afternoon after the Senate convenes depends on the action ofthe court, Senator Black indicated.

"Bunk," Asserts Hogan.

"MacCracken will be available," said Hogan. "He always has been available. That is just a lot of bunk about his being missing and in hiding before he went to Jurney's apartment.

"I told Jurney I would produce MacCracken on five minutes notice at any time. Of course, I wanted to know when he was arrested because I wanted to obtain a writ of habeas corpus before he could be taken into the Senate. Jurney told me that he was instructed not to let me turn MacCracken over to him but tto pick him up on the street or on a golf course, on a golf course in this kind of weather!"

Hogan said he did not blame Jurney, who was "acting under orders from Senator Black."

There was no secret about the fact that Senator Black wanted MacCracken arrested while the Senate was sitting and brought quickly before that body to avoid habeas corpus action. Refusal by Jurney to arrest MacCracken while the Senate was not in session apparently was for the same purposse.

Johnson Seeks State Statutes To Bolser NRA

Sends "Model" Law to Governors, Asking Cooperation.

sity that all should obey if the codes are to stand up.

Johnson's letter to the governors said:

"The NRA does not presume to give definite advice as to the particular provisions which such legislation should include in any particular Statae which elects to cooperate by the enactment of such a stataute.

Uniform Laws Urged.

"However, it is thought that a substantial uniformity in the character of the various acts of the several Stataes would prevent confusion and conflicts and aid in the coordination of the efforts of the Nation and the States. With this thought in mind, the following is submitted as a form for a statute which provides for full cooperation with the National Recovery Administration in this emergency. This may be used as an aid in drafting, or in any way you see fit."

Essentials of the model law proposed are:

That State and local officials may be employed in NRA policing.

Compliance with a code may not be avoided by the plea that the individual or firm involved is not engaged in interstate commerce.

$500 Fine Proposed.

The terms of the applicable code shall have the force of Statae law for all.

Violations by employers, whether engaged in interstate commerce or not, shall be subject to a $500 State fine for each day of violation.

Firms complying with codes shall be exempt from provisions of State anti-trust laws or any court decrees issued under them.

The State, county and municipal purchasing shall be limited to code compliants.

Whether MacCracken actually has been arrested probably will be decided by the court.

Disputes Senate Authority.

MacCracken, aviation attorney who has represented numerous air mail contract lines, challenged the authority of the Senate last Friday to cite him for contempt in connection with his refusal to give a Senate investigating committee access to his files and permitting removal of correspondence by three aviation company offifficials, now being tried on contempt charges.

MacCracken was first arrested on he had refused to yield his office a Senate warrant February 2, after files concerning air mail contracts to the committee.

status for them because they in-

He had insisted on a privileged eluded correspondence between a lawyer and his client. Just before the first warrant was served, he informed the committee that the last of his clients had agreed to waive the claim of privilege, and offered to give up everything desired.

Citation Follows.

The Senate then cited him for contempt for permitting the removal of air mail correspondence from his files while under subpena.

Also cited were Harris N. Hanshue, president of the Western Air Express; Gilbert L. Givvin, the company's Washington representative, and L. H. Brittin, vice president of Northwest Airways.

Brittin had admitted removing and destroying correspondence which he asserted was personal. Givvin said he removed other correspondence on Hanshue's instructions.

All four respondents agreed to appear last Friday to answer the contempt citation, but only the avtiation officials appeared. MacCracken refused to appear and was "missing" until he visited Jurney's partment Saturday night demanding to be arrested.

Wellesley Group Sponsors Benefit

Miss Skinner's First Show to Pay 2 Scholarships.

Two Washington girls will be given scholarships to Wellesley College through the efforts of the Washington-Wellesley Club in sponsoring the opening performance of Cornelia Otis Skinner's "Loves of Charles II." The proceeds of this benefit will be added to the Marion Kinney Brookings scholarship fund.

Among the sponsors for the evening is Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes, herself a graduate of Wellesley College, and whose daughter, Mrs. Chauncey L. Weidell, was graduated from Wellesley a few years ago.

The performance promises to be one of unusual interest. Not only is Miss Skinner always popular in Washington, but her new solo drama, "The Loves of Charles II," which she presents here for the first time this evening, has received unstinted praise from theater audiences in other cities, many contending that it is the most effective of all her brilliant list of character sketches. Miss Skinner has chosen for portrayal Henrietta Maria, a Dutch tavern wench; Barbara Villiers, Louise de Queroalle, Nell Gwyn, and Catherine of Braganza.

The costumes and the color of the wigs, Miss Skinner has worked out from reproductions of portraits by Sir Lely in his collection of "Windsor Beauties."

Violent Earthquake Terrorizes Peruvians

Lima, Peru, Feb. 11 (AP).—A violent earth shock of considerable duration was felt here at 4:10 p. m. today.

Several thousand bull fight fans were frightened into near-panic. Calm was restored when others began clapping their hands. Realizing the effectiveness of this device, the whole audience soon joined in.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

Questionnaire for a Home Builder.

("Home builders should be psychoanalyzed," says William Lecaze, New York architect, proposing questionnaires to determine tastes and requirements of builders.—News item.)

1. How many people are there in your family and are there any two alike?
2. Have you a gadget complex or don't you mind if there are no wall attachments for opening bottles?
3. What do you consider the relative importance of contract bridge, home gardening, week-end house parties, radio programs?
4. Are you a moderate drinker or will you need wider corridors?

* * * *

5. Do you keep a dog. If so, is it a lap dog or will a special extension be necessary? What place does an animal hold in your affections with respect to your children and neighbors?
6. Would you kill an architect who failed to take into consideration the comfort of a Great Dane and its importance in one's home life?
7. Check the clause which properly completes the following: If I fell down stars I would—
   (a) Call a physician.
   (b) Notify the insurance company.
   (c) Write a letter to the newspapers.
   (d) Call up the architect and bawl him out.
8. Give a brief statement expressing yourself on the relative importance in family life of the following institutions:
   (a) A Roman bathroom in colored tile.
   (b) A tennis court.
   (c) Ample guest rooms.
   (d) A rock garden and fish pool.
   (e) A good heating plant.
   (f) A home putting green.
9. Have you ever had any great tragedy in your life or have you been careful not to buy a suburban home from the real estate agent's description?
10. Do you go in for week-end house parties or will no steel reinforcements of the building be necessary?
11. Are you an outdoor bug who carries the craving for a tropical tan to the point of fanaticism or will you want a house sufficiently large to give you a feeling of comfort when you are indoors?
12. Do you smoke a pipe or will the installation of mechanical blowers and air purifiers be unessential to the comfort of your wife and her mother?
13. Is this your first owned home or have you been disappointed in real estate so often that nothing an architect may do can make you happy?
14. Do you and your wife get along peacefully as a rule or should the walls be soundproofed?
15. Has there been any insanity in your family or hasn't any member of it ever fallen a victim of the conviction that in the ideal American home the bathrooms should be larger, more numerous and more beautiful than the other rooms?
16. Is a good view an obsession or don't you care what goes on in the neighborings homes?
17. Will you require ample book shelves or are you and your children average Americans?

Overlooked.

With a winter like this, the Government forgot about a code for sleigh drivers.

Washington talks of easing the income taxes on "earned incomes." After all, what is an earned income? First of all, it would seem, should come the men who wash the windows in Radio City. And after them:

1. Elephant trainers.
2. The wardrobe mistress at the Metropolitan Opera House.
3. Flagpole sitters.
4. The men who keep pythons alive by forced feeding.
5. Workers who put all those pins in men's shirts.
6. Any pitcher against the Yanks.
7. Professional shad boners.

The automobile industry is booming, but statisticians say that hitchhikers still outnumber the automobile, 78 to 1.

Speaking of that epidemic of bank robberies, it seems a little encouraging to feel that they are at least outside jobs.

Lincoln, Capable Story Teller, Used Best Yarns for Purpose

His Reply to Douglas on Rum Is One of Best-Known Anecdotes.

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 11 (AP).—The man whose 125th birth anniversary Americans will observe tomorrow, thoroughly injoyed spinning yarns but his choice ones were usually related for a purpose.

Collectors of Lincoln stories here recently brought to attention again one of his best known anecdotes—told during one of his debates with Stephen A. Douglas.

Speaking at Galesburg on the night of October 7, 1858, Judge Douglas closed his speech with an attack on his opponent's career.

Lincoln, Douglas said, failed at everything he attempted: At farming, teaching, liquor selling and law, and now he was trying politics.

Lincoln's Answer.

Abe arose and said that Douglas had presented an accurate picture:

"It's true—every word of it. I've tried a lot of things, but there's one thing that Douglas forgot. He told you that I sold liquor, but he didn't mention that while I had quit my side of the counter the judge has remained on his."

The reference to Douglas' well-known weakness brought hearty laughter from the audience.

During the early part of the War Between the States a scandal in the War Department obliged Lincoln to appoint a new Secretary. Republican Senators called upon him and urged that he change the entire Cabinet of seven members. Lincoln told them this:

"An Illinois farmer was troubled with skunks. One night he went out with his shotgun and returned after one discharge. His wife asked him what luck he had.

Senators Retire.

"'Well,' he said, 'there were seven skunks—not one. I killed one with my first shot and he raised such a fearful smell that I decided to let the rest go away.'"

The Senators retired.

One typical story shows Lincoln pitted against a glib orator but a shallow thinker in a court case. After hearing a number of irresponsible statements, Lincoln said:

"I never knew of but one thing which compared with my friend in this particular. In my keel-boating days I ran across a trifling little steamboat which had a five-foot boiler and a seven-foot whistle, and every time it whistled the boat stopped."

Tailless Manx Cats Entered In Show Here

Bobtail Siamese, Persian Aristocrats and Alley Tabbies to Meet.

Two tailless cats whose ancestors lapped milk from earthen platters on the Isle of Man, will meet a royal bobtailed Siamese cat amid the pomp and dignity of public competition, at the Washington Cat Club's annual show in Arcadia Hall Wednesday and Thursday.

The Manx cats are coming to the District from Perryburg, Ohio. They are owned by Robert Marsh. Recently they took highest honors in the Manx class at a big show in Toledo.

The Royal Siamese, a wild-eyed creature whose tail is naturally but a stump, is being entered by Mrs. Martin K. Metcalf, of Washington. These cats are noted for their grace—and frequently reproduce short-tailed descendants reproduce generations, even though bred with domestic mates.

All varieties of cats will be in the competition. There will be red short-hair cats, Persian aristocrats, ordinary longhairs and innumerable alley products.

Patriarch of the show is expected to be Grand Old Man, 16-year-old pet of Mrs. V. J. Pedrone.

Competition, officials explained yesterday, is open to all cats in healthy condition. Those beasts whose sleek fur, bright eyes or lithe muscles may be attributed to strong heritage or feline "daily dozens" are eligible to win ribbons in the big event.

Mother, Son, Believing Other Dead, Meet After 25 Years

Friend's False Report of Death Led to Long Separation.

Alabama City, Ala., Feb. 11 (AP).—Whimsical fate finally got things straightened out and united a mother and her son, 25 years after each came to believe the other was dead.

In his youth, J. W. Thurkill left his home at Owls Valley, Ala., and took up his residence in Shelby, N. C. He didn't like to write letters and lost contact with his relatives as the years passed.

Just a quarter century ago, however, he decided to go back for a visit but got no farther than Atlanta. There he met an old friend who told him his mother had died, and he sadly returned to Shelby.

Thurkill was never a man to talk about the past, even to his wife. But three weeks ago curiosity got the better of her and she made him tell her something of his family.

She started a correspondence with a cousin he mentioned and one letter from the latter made casual reference to the continued good health of Thurkill's mother.

Thurkill hurried to Alabama City with his four children, and now he is intent upon taking his mother back to Shelby.

Nazis Make Jobs For War Disabled

Employers of 19 Must Hire One Veteran.

Berlin, Feb. 11 (AP).—Compulsory employment of maimed war veterans was stressed today by the Nazi newspaper Voelkischer Boebachter, which said present ordinances to this effect were often avoided.

Employers with a staff of more than 19 persons must find work for at least one disabled man and one more for every additional 50 employed, the newspaper stated.

Nonobservance entails a fine up to 1,000 marks ($391).

D. C. Symphony Among 12 Due For CWA Aid

Plan Calls for Public Concerts Over Nation in Return.

Extension of Federal aid to professional and skilled unemployed musicians was seen yesterday in the announcement of Representative Henry Ellenbogen, of Pennsylvania, that he had received assurance from Harry L. Hopkins, Federal relief administrator, that Federal funds would soon be granted to 12 of the Nation's symphony orchestras.

Under the plan musicians would receive a fixed salary from the Civil Works Administration on a 30-hour-week basis to give popular concerts among schools and Government institutions.

Among the orchestras to be benefited are the Washington National Symphony Orchestra, the Buffalo Symphony Orchestra and the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra.

Benefits for 1,200.

Ellenbogen explained that he was interested particularly in musical organizations because the musician, more than any other artist, has been hit by depression and the popularity of the talkies and the radio.

More than 1,200 individual musicians would be affected. The Federal program will not interfere with programs of individual orchestras.

Dr. Hans Kindler, conductor of the Washington National Symphony Orchestra, enthusiastically indorsed the plan yesterday.

Pointing out that musicians receive $640 a season for their work in the orchestra here, Dr. Kindler said married men can not live on this salary and they are dependent on what they can scrape up during the summer. It would be a marvelous thing from the educational standpoint and would furnish aid which is sorely needed by musicians today."

Many Eligible.

Dr. Kindler said that many musicians are eligible for Federal relief already. If Representative Ellenbogen's plan goes through it will serve to help the local union situation, he said.

It is known that Administrator Hopkins is favorably committed to the plan, but he said yesterday that definite plans haye not been made by his organization for carrying it through.

Italy and Church Mark Peace Date

King Joins in Celebrating 'Anniversary of Pact.

Rome, Feb. 11 (AP).—New assurance of accord between the Vatican and Italy was manifested today on the fifth anniversary of the signing of the treaty between the church and the Italian state.

King Victor Emanuel inaugurated an international exhibition of sacred art commemorating the event.

The Vatican paper, Osservatore Romano, said the peace now existing between Italy and the church could be achieved by the world at large only through "simplicity, brotherhood, loyalty and Christianity."

Papal flags mingling with Italian tricolors fluttered from all public buildings.

Society Waits Bal Boheme's Gala Debut

Event Tomorrow at the Willard to Attract Hundreds.

Glittering Costumes of Circusland to Be One Feature.

Tomorrow evening the Willard Hotel will be gay with throngs of people in costumes of all descriptions wending their way to the top floor to the ball room, where the Bal Boheme circus and side shows will take place. Although the members of the troupe will be gayly dressed as clowns, ballet dancers and animal trainers the audience will go in costumes that are worn when one goes to a show in the "Big Top" or in costumes of the past centuries.

With the First Lady occupying the box of honor, accompanied by members of the White House family; with the ladies of the Cabinet as guests of the club, seated in the box nearby; with the costume judges and the Bal Boheme committee looking down upon the merry throngs; the gay atmosphere of the "greatest show on earth" will prevail tonight.

Behind the boxes on either side of the ballroom, will rise tall wagons of the circus, interspersed with circus animals of every kind. Festoons of lights will hang from the chandeliers in the ceiling, banners will flaunt gay circus greeting.

Pretty girls bearing popcorn and peanuts, pink lemonade and cigarettes, will saunter from group to group, dispensing their wares. A dance orchestra will play in the big ballroom; and a little German band will furnish appropriate music for the side show in the smaller ballroom to the south. Huge circus tents will rise between them, while at the north end of the room will be a gypsy camp.

Bal Boheme Supper In Dining Room.

The famous Bal Boheme supper will be served in the main dining rooms, for the circus itself will fill the tenth floor with its many doings.

Sketched briefly, these are the joys envisioned by the Bal Boheme as promised by the Arts Club at this annual "frolic of the arts," the brilliant annual ball of the winter season here, attracting interest and the presence of the great and near great in official, diplomatic, artistic and residential circles of society.

The gypsy camp at 9:30, the circus parade at 10, the grand march at 10:45 and supper from 11 to 1 a. m., interspersed with performances in the side show at all hours; such is the scheduled program announced for the eleventh annual Bal Boheme of the Arts Club.

But this program merely sketches the countless gay events throughout the evening and early morning hours on this last day of the social season prior to the beginning of Lent, as arranged by the ball committee under the guiding hand of Anne Fuller Abbott, aided and abetted by Hugo Inden, Hans Kindler et al.

For Mr. Inden, one time celebrated artist of Dusseldorf, Germany, and Hans Kindler, celebrated musician and orchestra conductor in certain foreign cities, and both of them now of this Capital City, have put their heads together and thrilling results may be expected on Shrove Tuesday night beginning at 9:30.

For instance, a "classical" repertoire of circus music will be one of the many fascinating features of the circus ball, and whenever a featured performer appears in the ring there will be heard the old familiar strains and tunes true to the circus "tradition," in America. Likewise, when the floor committee appears as ring masters they will be arrayed according to certain foreign ideas of the great American circus, as perpetuated in the Cirque d'Hiver, in Paris, and in other European capitals.

The early comers will be greeted by singing and dancing gypsies in the anteroom to the north—the scene of a veritable gypsy camp. Kroom Bagranoff and Marion Ross, singers; Gypsy Sylvia and Mildred Brashears Sullivan, dancer; girls with programs for the guests of the occasion—gypsies, all gypsies.

Grand Parade to Be Started at 10 P. M.

Then on the stroke of 10 will form the great parade at the south end of the ballroom, and heralded by countless clowns and ringmasters, will march this gay processional pageant of the three rings. Felix Mahoney, chief clown of amateurs, and Frank Portillo, chief clown of professional circusdom, will vie for honors. The master clown, Portillo, aided and abetted by a splendid tumbler, Joe Calasco, will go from ring to ring, followed by clowns, clowns, clowns, students, debutantes, writers, artists.

The ubiquitous ringmasters, whips in hand, directing this melee of folk of the sawdust ring, will be the famous floor committee of the Bal Boheme, with John Paul Jones as ringmaster in chief. A group of Bavarian singers, a group of German Beer Garden Girls, Lisa Gardiner's dancing zebras, Anne Yago McGuffey and her ferocious lions, millions of monkeys trained by Donna Taggart, tumblers galore and acrobats, trained jumping horses and merry-go-round withal.

A lovely peacock in the person of Helen Griffith, the Three Little Pigs and the Big Bad Wolf, with Wallace Wright as the wolf; a symbolic group of the NRA encircling Maud Howell Smith as a Blue Eagle—but the order of this circus parade makes little difference, for its course will be kaleidoscopic and diverting, spectacular and original, to say the least.

Lester Shafer as the maharajah, with his harem and his dancing girls; Evelyn Davis as the daring bareback rider on her prancing steed, Marian Wolberg on an elephant, Harry Angelico as an organ grinder, and a chariot race by the Marjorie Webster Girls.

Then at 10:45 p. m. the grand march before the judges; the announcement of the awards for appropriate costumes of this circus theme. The side show opens to the merrymakers, with Brooke Johns as barker and master of ceremonies. Evelyn Tyner, his lovely and accomplished partner, will aid him in his act, and the variety show will present all manner of amusement by celebrated artists of the present day.

Above all, there will be general dancing as long as the throngs remain.

Miss Malinka to Wed Mr. James C. O'Brien

Announcement of the engagement of Miss Doris Henriellen Malinka to Mr. James Carey O'Brien was made at a luncheon Saturday at the Shoreham Hotel, given by the bride-to-be's mother. The floral decorations consisted of a mass of colonial bouquets and gardenias, which were presented at the conclusion of the luncheon, to the 18 guests present.

Miss Malinka is the daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Henry C. Malinka.

Schull - Gunner Wedding Occurs Today in Hawaii

Field Artillery Club at Post Decorated for Event; Bishop to Officiate.

The attractive rustic Field Artillery Club at Schofield Barracks, T. H., will be the scene of the wedding this afternoon at 5 o'clock of Miss Helen Gunner, daughter of Lieut. Col. and Mrs. Edwin Gunner, to Lieut. Herman Walter Schull, jr., son of Col. and Mrs. H. W. Schull, of Rock Island Arsenal, Ill. The ceremony will be performed by Bishop Littell, of Honolulu. The club will be decorated with gardenias and ginger blossoms against a background of dark ferns and island palms.

The bride will be escorted down the flower-marked aisle by her father. Her gown is of heavy white satin made on simple lines with a cowl neckline and a long flaring train. Her voluminous veil will be caught into a cap of Brussels lace and she will wear a lei of gardenias.

The maid of honor, Miss Mary Elizabeth Wheeler, of San Mateo, Calif., was a classmate of the bride at Wellesley. She will wear a ruffly garden frock of powder-blue mousseline de soie and a small matching hat, and will carry a mixed bouquet. The bridesmaids will be Miss Constance Ralston, daughter of Lieut. Col. Robert Ralston; Miss Helene Gowen, daughter of Breg. Gen. James B. Gowen, and Miss Barbara Conard, of Pearl Harbor, T. H. They will wear costumes like that of the maid of honor, of peach-colored mousseline de soie, and will carry mixed bouquets.

Lieut. Joseph Cox, C. E., will serve as best man, and the ushers are Lieut. Williston Palmer, Lieut. Robert Booth, F. A., Lieut. William D. Smith, C. E.; Lieut. Robert Des Islets, C. E.; Lieut. Keith Barney, C. E., and Lieut. Manuel Asensio, C. E.

Following the ceremony there will be a reception. The bride and bridegroom will receive with Lieut. Col. and Mrs. Gunner, the latter wearing a becomnig gown of turquoise-blue Alencon lace, and the parents of the bridegroom, Col. and Mrs. Schull.

Lieut. and Mrs. Schull will go on a sea voyage for their wedding trip.

The bride is a graduate of Miss Wright's School, Bryn Mawr, Pa., and of Wellesley College in the class of 1932. She has been doing post-graduate work at the University of Hawaii.

Lieut. Schull was graduated from West Point in 1927. Before going to the islands for duty he was stationed at Fort Humphreys, Va.

Lieut. Howard, Army Girl Wed At Ft. Benning

Daughter of Maj. M. J. Welty Married at Military Ceremony.

The brilliance and color of the full military ceremony marked the wedding of Miss Elizabeth Welty and Lieut. Charles Edward Mason Howard, jr., which took place Wednesday evening in a setting of beauty at the Protestant chapel at Fort Benning, Ga. Maj. Willis T. Howard, chaplain, performed the ceremony.

The picturesque chapel was decorated with plams. The altar and chancel were covered with white and veiled with sprays of Southern smilax. On either side of the altar and among the palms were pedestal baskets filled with gladioli, in shades of pink and yellow, lavender statice and roses. The altar rail was outlined with candles.

As the guests assembled, a music program was given by the Twenty-Ninth Infantry orchestra. Lohengrin's wedding march was used for the processional and Mendelsshon's for the recessional. "O, Promise Me" was played during the ceremony.

Groomsmen All Officers.

At the first strains of the wedding chorus the groomsmen entered and took their places, awaiting the approach of the bride. They were Lieut. James J. Herriot, Lieut. Arthur L. Cobb, Lieut. Daniel Walker, Lieut. Sidney G. Brown, Lieut. Sidney Wooten and Lieut. Robert B. Neeley.

Miss Kenneth Kendall was the maid of honor and only attendant. She wore a gown of tea rose crepe fashioned with a tiny jacket and long skirt ending in a short train. Her hat and slippers were of silver. She carried a bouquet of freesias in shades of pink and yellow, pink and yellow roses and long-stem violets tied with a bow of rainbow satin.

The bride entered with her father, Maj. Maurice D. Welty, and was met at the altar by the bridegroom and his best man, Lieut. Robert Ports. The bride wore her mother's wedding gown of heavy ivory satin and rose point lace. The skirt was long, and from it hung a long pleated train. A cap of real lace caught a voluminous tulle veil to her head. From the lace cap a panel of the lace fell the length of the train. The bride's flowers were of white roses and valley lillies made into an old-fashioned Colonial bouquet and outlined with a frill of lace.

Arch of Crossed Sabers.

The bride and bridegroom left the church to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding chorus, passing beneath an arch of crossed sabers held by the groomsmen.

Following the ceremony, Maj. and Mrs. Welty entertained with a reception and dance at the Polo Hunt Club. The club was decorated with sprays of smilax and large baskets filled with gladioli, roses, tulips, jonquils and statice, all in pastel shades.

Receiving the guests were Maj. and Mrs. Welty, Col. and Mrs. Charles E. N. Howard, of Washington, D. C., parents of the bridegroom; Richard Welty, of Greensburg, Pa., grandfather of the bride; the bride and bridegroom and members of their wedding party.

Mrs. Welty wore a gown of cream lace over flesh satin, her corsage was of gardenias.

Mrs. C. E. N. Howard, mother of the bridegroom, was gowned in black chiffon with corsage of freesias and rosebuds.

The bride's table was laid with lace over satin and in the center qwas a three-tiered cake, embossed in roses and valley lillies. Tall silver candlesticks held burning ivory tapers. The bride cut the cake with her husband's saber.

Lieut. and Mrs. Howard left for a wedding trip, after which they will go to their station in Texas.

Stewart-Cochran Troth Announced

Wedding Ceremony to Be Held in Spring.

Mr. and Mrs. William F. Cochran have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Ann W. Cochran, to Mr. Redmond C. Stewart, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Redmond C. Stewart.

Homes and Good Talk Chief Loves of Irish, Wife of Envoy Asserts

Danish-Born Spouse of Minister MacWhite, of Free State, Says Hearthstones Are Center of Universe for Women of Erin; She Has Won Wide Renown as Landscape Painter.

The measure of their greatness is told by the simplicity of spirit with which women of the Diplomatic Corps in Washington wear the mantle of responsibility life has placed upon their shoulders. The only topic which does not interest them is self. To everything else in life they bring a spontaneous and sympathetic interest; and nearest their hearts, of course, are the subjects of family and homeland.

This article is the nineteenth in a series of interviews with wives of distinguished diplomats.

By Elizabeth Young.

Love of home and love of good talk are two conspicuous characteristics of the Irish people. Their lives are rich and full—no matter how limited their income—and their doors are hospitably open to every comer.

Such is the picture which Mrs. Michael MacWhite, wife of the Minister of the Irish Free State, paints of life in her adopted country. Mrs. MacWhite is Danish by birth, but she has a 10-year-old son, Eoin, who is so intensely Irish that he is even sensitive on the point of his mother's Danish heritage.

"Irish women are perhaps the most home-loving women in the world," said Mrs. MacWhite. "They give themselves altogether to their homes and families. They make their hearthstones the center of their universe. And to this day divorce is practically unknown there. As a matter of fact, it is not legally obtainable, and nobody seems to be the worse off on that account.

"It is a well known fact that the art of conversation is one of the outstanding characteristics of every Irish man or woman. Conversation is developed in the family circle. When two Irishmen meet their usual greeting is not 'How do you do,' but rather 'What news?' This was also a trait of their ancestors of a thousand years ago.

Great and Small Salons.

"In a poor man's cottage, so small that one wonders how it houses the family—and families of a dozen children are not uncommon—one frequently meets on an evening with a score or so of the neighbors gathered around the hearth for a friendly smoke and talk.

"If one didn't know the Irish, one might be amazed to hear the high immaterial subjects they discuss. Dublin is noted for its literary and political salons where people may drop in, as a rule, on Sunday nights without invitation and hear all kinds of topics freely discussed. And this notwithstanding the fact that many of the guests may represent diametrically opposed camps of thought. These discussions are invariably friendly and objective.

"But, of course, there are many who talk just for the sake of argument. The story is told of a well-known Cork professor who debated a certain subject for hours and hours. And when being congratulated on having vanquished his opponent, he sighed. 'Ah, but I could have made a much better case for the other side.'"

Their love of home is not, however, keeping Irish women from making their influence felt in the political and professional life of the country, according to Mrs. MacWhite, and many of them are making splendid records in the medical, educational, journalistic and political fields.

Patriotism of Irish Women.

"The women of Ireland have long been noted for their patriotism," she said. "They have a keen political sense. During the land agitation of half a century ago and throughout the Sinn Fein movement that led up to the establishment of the Free State, the women stepped into the breach after their men folk were either imprisoned or interned.

"There are three women members of Dail Eireann—the House of Representatives—and four women members of the Senate, and there are many women professors in the Irish universities. And, by the way, in University College, Galway, this year, the female students outnumber the male. Soon after the Free State government began to function the study of the native tongue was made compulsory along with English in the schools. In certain schools and colleges Irish is the sole medium of instruction."

Problem of Gaelic.

Mrs. MacWhite is puzzling over the problem of how to teach her own son Gaelic before he reaches the age when mastery of the tongue is difficult. He is a student at Mount Washington Country School for Boys near Baltimore, and Gaelic is not included in the curriculum of American schools.

"I am much concerned how to give him an opportunity to learn the Gaelic tongue before it becomes too difficult," she said. "It would be difficult to find a Gaelic teacher, unless my husband sat down and endeavored to do it himself. In his youth he taught Gaelic."

She is thinking of taking her son with her to Ireland next summer, when she goes to paint, and leaving him at Ring College, where all the instruction is in Gaelic.

Mrs. MacWhite, who is an internationally known landscape artist, met her husband in Paris in 1920, when she was a student at the Julian Academy of Art, and Mr. MacWhite was secretary of the Irish republican delegation which vainly sought representation at the Peace Conference.

Blue Hills of Ireland.

They were married in Paris the following year, and went to Ireland on their honeymoon. This was just before the establishment of the Irish Free State.

"It's hard to believe how blue are the hills of Ireland unless you've been there," said Mrs. MacWhite. "Ireland, as you know, is the most western part of Europe. It derives its particular atmospheric condition from the Atlantic Ocean. The skies are low and changeable. Somehow, the blue of the sea seems to reflect itself through the clouds which hang over the low hills."

Mrs. MacWhite has captured on canvas this faery quality of Ireland's landscape, in a picture called "Storm Over Muilrea."

This canvas—her husband's favorite—will be shown at the Roerich Museum in New York the last of this month as part of an exhibit of 50 pictures she is making by invitation of the director, Louis L. Horsch. Mr. Horsch first saw Mrs. MacWhite's work some months ago, on the occasion of an official call upon the Minister of the Irish Free State. He immediately and enthusiastically arranged the exhibit to acquaint the American public with the work of this gifted artist whose canvases have been acclaimed by critics in many countries.

Mrs. MacWhite has given "one-man" shows of her work in Geneva and Dublin. She has painted in France, Italy, Switzerland, Ireland and Denmark, and in this country the New England coast line has particularly inspired her.

Soon after their marriage, Mr. MacWhite was appointed as representative to the League of Nations—the first diplomatic post created by the Irish Free State—and they were stationed in Geneva for seven years before coming to Washington five years ago.

Inspiration in Solitude.

Mrs. MacWhite continued her study of art in Geneva and often stole away to Paris on holidays, during which she devoted herself entirely to painting and to study in many academies. She made solitary journeys into the Alps, into northern Italy and into the French countryside in search of subjects. Eventually she found her medium in landscapes, but is also fond of still life painting and does occasional portrait study.

"The presence of another person's mind, while I am painting, has a peculiar effect upon me," she said. "It is that which stands in the way of my painting portraits. I love to be alone. I feel much more inspired for creative work in absolute solitude."

Mrs. MacWhite was born at Hillerod, near Copenhagen, in Denmark. From early childhood she displayed marked artistic ability and an ardent desire to embark upon a painting career. Her family insisted, however, that she first be provided with a practical education.

"Only when I had proven by capabilities as a student of commercial subjects and domestic science courses was I permitted to embark upon the career of my desire," she said. "I studied first in Copenhagen; then in London for a while, and thereafter in Paris. There I met my husband."

Food Cooked American Style Is the Most Nourishing and Good, Italian Chef of Raleigh Hotel, Experienced in All, Asserts

According to Chef Croci, of the Raleigh Hotel, the kitchen is no place for any one to spend a life. A believer in simplicity, and natural living, he would rather have a farm and go hunting. One of his cooks stirs the cranberries boiling in a big copper kettle. The chef gives several recipes, including one for cranberry juice, an appetizer which has been a popular selection of the hotel patrons.

Croci Holds European Dishes Are Too Fancy, Spicy and Rich

But 40 Years of Looking at and Handling Food Have Made Him Unenthusiastic About Eating and He Would Like to Live on Farm, Hunt Ducks and Sip Chianti.

Any profession, no matter what it is, has its advantages and its drawbacks. In the profession of cooking the disadvantages are much the same that the average housewife experiences, though on a larger scale.

Here we have statements from the lips of a prominent chef about the underground world of the kitchens. This is the seventh of a series of interviews with Washington's foremost chefs.

By Susan Mills.

Having tried, tasted and cooked them all, one Italian chef definitely prefers American to any form of European cooking.

Chef Croci, of the Raleigh Hotel, pushed his white cap a bit farther back on his head and stated:

"American cooking is the most healthy of all. It is substantial, nourishing and good. European foods are hard on the people who eat them, they contain too much spice, they are too rich, and the people get indigestion.

"I don't want to eat fancy things that disagree with me. I like to live a healthy life—eating healthful food.

"But I suppose I have been in a kitchen too long, for I am getting tired of seeing food. It begins to take away my appetite. I eat very little here. When you have been looking at food for over 40 years you can't help it.

Thoughts on Kitchens.

"Of course, like all chefs, I started from the bottom and learned everything I could. Yet I know I know nothing. Nobody knows anything—somebody said, 'No one knows what the hobo knows.' Isn't that right?

"But I say now, after I have learned all I can and still learn more, that if a man wants to go into a kitchen for a living he does it because he doesn't know any better.

"The kitchen isn't a healthy place for anyone—no fresh air, no sunshine, and so much heat. A man can stand it for so long, say until he is 50 years old, then poof! He'll break.

"You see, it is like a tree. Here," he made a rough sketch on a piece of paper, "are the roots stretching into the ground and here the trunk and branches and leaves. So. Let us pretend there is a fire underground near the roots. Well, pretty soon the roots grow out to the fire, then a few leaves high up on the tree begin to wither. It may take one year, two, three—I don't know, but pretty soon the tree is dead.

Came from Verdi's Home Town.

"You put a man behind one of those ovens," he pointed to the dark hot hulk of a stove, "and for some time he can stand it, then he is like the tree—no more life in him.

"I have seen the men come and go, I have been behind the ovens myself and I know what it is like.

"Yes, it is almost the same with the housewife behind her stove—like everyone else, she needs fresh air, and out-of-doors sunshine.

"I think if I had my way I would get a farm out in the country somewhere, with a little house, and I would hunt ducks. Yes, ducks, and pheasants, and all kinds of birds—I love hunting better than anything else. And I would drink lots of Chianti wine. It is an Italian wine, very special, made of very special grapes. It is made in north Italy where my home is.

"The musician Verdi was born in my home town, in Parma. I remember my father telling me of a violin he had that Verdi once played. It was a long time ago he told me; I left home when I was 17.

20 Years at Raleigh.

"After I left home, let me see—" he squinted his eyes thoughtfully. "I went to London, and was in a kitchen there. I went into the kitchen because I just wanted to know what was what. Then I came to this country and was in a hotel in New York. I went back to Italy, then I went to France—I have travelled a lot—then I came back and was head chef at a hotel in Albany.

"I have been here at the Raleigh since 1914. I was called to the war, but because I was the head of my profession I was exempted from service.

"I have found that a hot meat loaf is one of the most popular dishes here. I serve it with a mushroom sauce and lyonnaise potatoes.

"There is one man who comes regularly. I say he eats like a rabbit—always raw vegetables. He came into the kitchen and stood over my shoulder while we fixed him carrots, cabbage, peas, potatoes, onions, spinash, turnips—all chopped up fine. He would not have any dressing, either, just ate it raw.

Cornflake Sandwich!

"What was that funny thing about a month ago?" He pressed his hand to his forehead and thought. "Oh, yes, I remember. A man came down into the kitchen and wanted a cornflake sandwich! Did you ever hear of a cornflake sandwich?"

"We use in all kitchens copper pans. They keep the food from burning. They are steel-lined with copper bottoms. They are pretty to look at, too."

"There is one dish that I fix for a colonel who comes here regularly. I call it 'the Colonel's Dish.' First I prepare a breast of capon, remove the skin and bones. This I saute in butter with a slice of Virginia ham and some fresh mushrooms. Then I remove the ham, add a cream sauce and let it cook for about 25 minutes. I remove the meat and mushrooms, and strain the sauce, place the breast of capon on a slice of toast, with the ham and mushrooms on top, pour the sauce over it, and garnish with California white cherries.

Salad and Cranberry Juice.

"My chief salad is just celery hearts, Belgian endives, a little onion, tomato, romaine, and a sprinkle of garlic. This serve with a dressing of oil, vinegar and seasonings.

"Here is the recipe for the cranberry juice. This will make gallons and gallons. Of course the housewife could cut it down to fit her family. The hotel family is so large you see."

Cranberry juice—Boil 2 gallons of water with 8 pounds sugar until it makes a syrup. Then boil 25 pounds of cranberries with 4 gallons water; cook well and strain, pressing the pulp through a fine collender. Add the syrup and more sugar to taste. Bottle, chill and serve.

Tomorrow another of Washington's chefs will be introduced to you through the Woman's Page.

Moslem Males Not Monarchs In Home, New Book Reveals

Wife and His Grandmother Both Rule Turk, Says Achmed Abdullah.

American husbands browbeaten by termagant and spendthrift wives often have looked with envy upon the sleek, lordly heads of Moslem households. But they have looked with the eye of delusion, Achmed Abdullah reveals in his new book of personal adventures and reminiscences, "The Cat Had Nine Lives."

Women are the same the world over, according to Abdullah, and the swaggering Turk has not only one boss, but two—his wife and his grandmother. In fact it is the grandmother who is the real boss. While it is a mother's duty to bear children, it is the grandmother's to rear and direct them.

Moreover, Moslem women, like their sisters all over the world, have their own private philosophy of men's foibles. Here is one of their favorite maxims as given by Abdullah:

"The drum which booms most loudly is filled with wind."

Another favorite saying of the Moslem women in relation to men is:

"One with a wax nose is easily led."

All the accumulated wisdom of womankind is embodied in other Moslem sayings such as:

"She wooed him and he resisted. She neglected him and he fell in love.

"And his advice; then do the opposite.

"When a man's stomach is involved, wisdom withdraws.

"A lie is a bridge which leads to happiness."

However much of a whiphold Moslem women may have held on their husbands secretly, the men themselves, including Mohammed himself, cherished the masculine delusion of grandeur, Abdullah's book shows. A chapter devoted to "Mohammed on the Subject of Women" gives three of the prophet's maxims as follows:

"Forgive your wife 70 times a day.

"How then, may a wise man admonish his wife? For women are created from a crooked rib of Adam. Therefore, if ye wish to straighten it, ye will break it. And if ye wish to leave it alone, it will always remain crooked.

"O, Assembly of women, give alms, although it be of your gold and silver ornaments. For verily ye are mostly of hell on the Day of Resurrection."

Wife of Irish Envoy and One of Her Paintings

Writing Wife of Sinclair Lewis, Here, Discovers Attractive Speaking Mannerism of President

Dorothy Thompson Talks of Many Subjects That Agitate World.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

Between sips of orange juice and bites of toast, Mrs. Sinclair Lewis, who writes under her own name of Dorothy Thompson, made pungent comments yesterday at the Mayflower on careers versus domesticity, the situation in Germany, Austria and France; mannerisms of President Roosevelt, anti-Semitism propaganda, and the best surroundings in which to rear children.

Mrs. Lewis, tall, well-proportioned, brown-haired, received a small procession of callers as she breakfasted in her room. She was in her bath when the reporter arrived a few minutes after 10. Before she appeared in a silk-striped dressing gown and blue tailored pajamas that emphasized the blueness of her eyes, Dr. Gustav Stolper, from Berlin, entered.

"Hello, Dorothy," yelled the German, publisher of Berlin's leading economic journal in pre-Nazi days. He paced up and down as he waited for Mrs. Lewis. When she strode into the room the two broke into animated conversation in German.

Cheered by Austrian News.

A remark of Dr. Stolper's brought an excited cry from the novelist's wife. She clapped her hands. "How wonderful! Where's the paper?"

Dr. Stolper held out a New York newspaper, pointing with a pudgy finger to a front page article. Mrs. Lewis scanned it rapidly. "Wonderful! Absolutely wonderful!" she exclaimed.

She turned to the reporter. "We're talking about the situation in Austria. It's good news today." She smiled wryly. "It's about time, too. Most of the dispatches have carried very bad news. I'm terribly interested in the situation over there. You see, I'm half Viennese.

"Oh, not really, of course." Her eyes sparkled. "But I lived there for quite a while, and loved the place. Dr. Stolper loves it, too. That's why we're so worked up over things that are going on there."

There was a knock at the door.

"Come in," she called.

It was Ernestine Evans, magazine writer. They began making luncheon plans. Miss Evans mentioned a woman guest.

Presidential Blinking.

"Oh, don't ask a woman," advised Mrs. Lewis. "I've been talking to too many women. I'd like to talk to some men for a change. They ought to have something to say. I want to find out what's going on here."

Miss Evans began looking in the telephone book.

"The President has a strange habit of blinking his eyes very fast after he has made a statement," said Mrs. Lewis, apropos of nothing at all. "Seems queer that nobody has ever written about the mannerism. I find it charming. It gives the impression that he is adding a second period to his sentences."

"Curiosity" Brought Her.

Asked what had brought her to Washington she said bluntly, "Curiosity." Then she added, "I came here in the same way a foreign correspondent would. I knew very little about the place, but I'm finding it fascinating. The things going on here are just as amazing and important as the happenings in London, Berlin or Vienna. I have to return to New York on Monday—my child is having his tonsils out—but I want to come back here as soon as I can."

Mrs. Lewis admitted that she has found it difficult to adjust her career as a writer with being a wife and mother. Her devotion to Mr. Lewis and their little son was apparent in the tone of her voice and the expression in her eyes whenever she spoke of them. She lives in the country—Vermont in summer and just outside New York in winter—because it is good for the baby and because Mr. Lewis finds it easier to work in rural surroundings.

"Personally, I like cities; they stimulate me," declared the woman who "saw Hitler." She believes that women all over the world are beginning to turn from business and professional life to old-fashioned wifehood and motherhood. "Work isn't everything, you know. That's why the German women are not particularly unhappy over Hitler's decree that they should leave their jobs, marry and have babies. I don't think Hitler's plan will work, however. There aren't enough prospective husbands in Germany."

Ambition for Son.

"Anti-Semitism propaganda? No, I don't think it will ever make much headway in this country. Our sense of self-preservation is too strong for us to have racial wars; too many nationalities and religions represented here. The less said and written about anti-Semitism propaganda the better, I think."

Mrs. Lewis and her Nobel prize winning husband, when writing, work entirely independent of each other. She was horrified at the suggestion that they might criticize each other's work.

"I should say not. I wouldn't dream of asking him to criticize anything I was writing. Sometimes I ask his opinion of an article after it is completed. And if he doesn't approve of it, I'm crushed. He's that way too."

When she was asked if she hoped her son would follow his parents' profession, she said, "What a silly question. He must do what he wants. But if he wants to have fun, I'd advise him to be a revolutionary."

Roosevelt's Blinking After Making Statement Is "Full of Charm."

I Passed a Shade.

By Katherine Smith.

I passed a cool and smiling shade who hummed
A song of whimsicality and cheer,
He held a flippant lute on which he strummed
Bright music. As he passed, his foot fell near
My own. I stopped and asked him how he dared
To sing so thoughtless and so gay a song
Before the great world—sorrow—had he cared
For life with sympathy? Did not the long
Low cry of anguish from a wounded earth
Arouse his pity? Could he watch its pain
Without respect? And when he saw new birth
To torment, should he sing a new refrain?
He looked surprised—and then laughed and said,
"I can afford to sing—for I am dead!"

Foreheads Demand Attention To Go Well With New Hats

Neglect of Face Above Nose Must Cease, Dame Fashion Decrees.

Attentions, foreheads!

The past season fashion has been kind to those who have neglected foreheads. We have pulled a hat well down over our eyes and proceeded on our careless way. But this spring Easter bonnets will be pushed far back on our heads, and foreheads are mercilessly revealed in all their beauty or imperfection.

Many a pretty face topped by a hat that is a miracle of millinery beauty is marred by the forehead between, which often resembles a corrugated washboard. And there is moaning and lamentation among the ladies.

But things are not as bad as they seem. First take a good look at your forehead and decide the source of your trouble. Often it is a simple matter of makeup. For many are in the habit of making up the rest of the face with infinite care and as a last thought dabbing a little powder on the space above the nose.

Make up your forehead as carefully as you do the rest of your face. First put on a good powder base and then apply your powder carefully.

And about those wrinkles!

The surest method of making them vanish is massage with a good cold cream. Faithful application nightly will work miracles with the most unsightly forehead.

Then get at the source of the trouble. Wrinkles in the forehead are often due to eye strain, nervousness or just plain frowning. Have your eyes examined and if necessary wear glasses while working. Learn to relax a few moments every day. The most stubborn case of nerves will yield to such sympathetic treatment.

And about the habitual frown! Of course there are many things which cause one to frown. But a frown has never yet worked a miracle and a smile often has. And certainly smiling wrinkles are preferable to frowning ones.

But if you wish to abolish wrinkles altogether there is the ideal of beauty expressed by the poet which many men prefer. "There was a quiet and serene grace, a cast of thought about her face."

Beauty Counsel Is Freely Given By Store Expert

Consultation on Problems of Individuals Is Now Available to All.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

The road to good looks for a good many years has been little more than a bridle path. But women are becoming more and more beauty conscious and laying claims to every means within their ken to enhance nature. As a result, the road is fast becoming paved with ingenious methods whereby sallow skins, blotches and all the other charm menaces are easily banished.

It is no longer only the lady of leisure, or the one with a purse full of glittering coins who can delve into the beauty "secrets." For there are no more secrets. Beauty salons offer free consultations; department stores sponsor representatives whose business it is to talk to any one and every one interested in improving her face and form.

This week a large local store is inviting Washington women to stop in and confer with their visitor, who incidentally has a National reputation as a beauty expert. She will analyze the skin and proffer excellent advice. It is her opinion that half the women who "just miss" being good looking can remedy that by concentrating on grooming. No matter how fluffy and pretty a person's hair, or thick and black the brows, if her hair isn't trained and properly arranged, if her brows aren't plucked, if her skin is allowed to look dusty, she simply cannot lay claim to beauty.

This expert will tell you how to recondition the skin after the cold weather. She will recommend flattering make-up, and go right down the good looks line from the care of hair to the care of hands.

She has information which should interest every woman in this town. And those who can't afford to place themselves in the hands of the salon's artists will be able to assimilate a lot of helpful knowledge in this way. She will be glad to discuss individual problems and will be sure to give good, practical advice.

Better Booby Prizes.

Hostesses who give bridge parties and neglect to provide a booby prize unwittingly leave out half the fun of the occasion. Not that the high-score prize isn't the main event! But a wise selection of something original and amusing for "low man" will give pep and color to the most commonplace affair.

As a matter of fact, it really takes more honest-to-goodness thought to choose a successful booby prize than high score. But the woman who knows her shops can without much difficulty turn to a rich field for her selection.

An F street shop has some Chinese "back scratchers" which belie their name by looking most remarkably dignified. Small aristocratic ivory hands fastened to a long bamboo arm are as good for tickling the fancy as the back.

How to Iron Out That Frown.

Psychologists tell us that if we cease to frown half the reasons which prompt us to will automatically disappear.

It's a challenge which the wise woman will not ignore. If she can banish vexatious problems by banishing frowns she is that much ahead of the game. And if she can keep away forehead wrinkles by the same means she is accomplishing a splendid double purpose.

But how? There's the rub! Remembering not to frown is one way—as difficult as it sounds, for it's second nature with the woman whose life is fairly full of daily perplexities to wrinkle her forehead when she's puzzled, when she is worried, or when she's concentrating with might and main.

Nevertheless, there's a means deavor. It's the forehead strap designed and manufactured by a woman most singularly successful with her aids to feminine charm. This should be adjusted tightly around the head over the forehead, and left on as long as possible. Consistent usage over a certain length of time never fails to show results.

Bubbles of Beauty.

Some time ago a Connecticut avenue shop had a small supply of lovely glass bubbles for use as centerpieces, finger bowls, aquarium. They were only in the shop a short while. Women who are always eager to introduce interesting decorative schemes into their homes bought them up immediately. For quite a while there were no more available, but we noticed the other day that another supply is in. Some of these are iridescent, others plain. They are large, small and medium, in amber, blue, green, amethyst and crystal.

Adaptable Jewelry.

An F street shop which specializes in displaying the newest types of jewelry is featuring some lovely gold necklaces. With their crystal clusters they look like some our grandmothers might have owned.

There's also necklaces, bracelets, earrings and clips with pearls and rhinestones. This is probably the most adaptable jewelry on the market as it's in equally good taste for old or young, and lends its own particular charm to any kind of costume.

What Today Means

"Aquarius."

If February 12 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9:30 to 10:30 a. m., from 1 to 2 p. m. and from 6 to 7 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 8:30 a. m., from 3 to 4 p. m. and from 8 to 9 p. m.

If you were born on February 12 you are an extremely proper type of person. You are a stickler for the strict observance of all the forms prescribed by conventionalities. It may be possible some day you will realize it does not pay to be too supercritical and that a sense of humor makes life worth while living. There has never been a truer saying than "Laugh and the world laughs with you; weep and you weep alone." It is sometimes well for us to accept the world as we find it and not try to change it by reforms. Remember sunshine brings cheer. Storm, many times despair. Be joyous and tolerant.

The child born on February 12 will, as it grows older, display a serious streak in its make-up. Never encourage a child to indulge in moodiness by ignoring the existence of this habit. It is a comparatively easy matter to train a child's thoughts to dwell on the good and beautiful in life, and to learn to be continually grateful for its many blessings. The great trouble with most people who are responsible for a child's training is that they themselves habitually ignore the many benefits that have been showered upon them and are lacking in appreciation. Explicatively define for it the word gratitude, and when its full meaning is understood it will never be forgotten.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Frostbite.

A correspondent wants an article on chilblains. The nature of the inquiry indicates that he is especially interested in the after-effects of exposure to cold rather than in frostbite. I hope he will not mind if the answer is divided between his problem and an allied one in which there is a present seasonal interest.

The immediate effect is frostbite or, in rare instances, freezing of the tissues. A sensitization to cold may result. This sensitization, when mild, causes itching or burning of the feet and, if worse, blisters result. If there be a second severe exposure there may be frostbite, blister formation, or gangrene more severe than the exposure warranted.

The treatment of frostbite or frozen foot is as follows:

Remove the shoes and stockings. Put the nipped feet in a pan of cold water. Chafe them gently. If some very clean nongranular snow is available it is permissible to rub with it, but if it is used, care must be taken not to scratch or otherwise irritate the skin. Rubbing with dirty snow may wound the skin and if so disastrous infection may follow.

The feet must not be held close to a radiator or exposed to a warm fire. Rapid warming greatly increases the pain and adds to the damage done the tissues by the freezing. During the process the feet must be thoroughly cleaned.

The after care depends on whether there is gangrene or not, or the amount of swelling if there is no gangrene. Home treatment is not enough if there is gangrene or evident tendency in that direction.

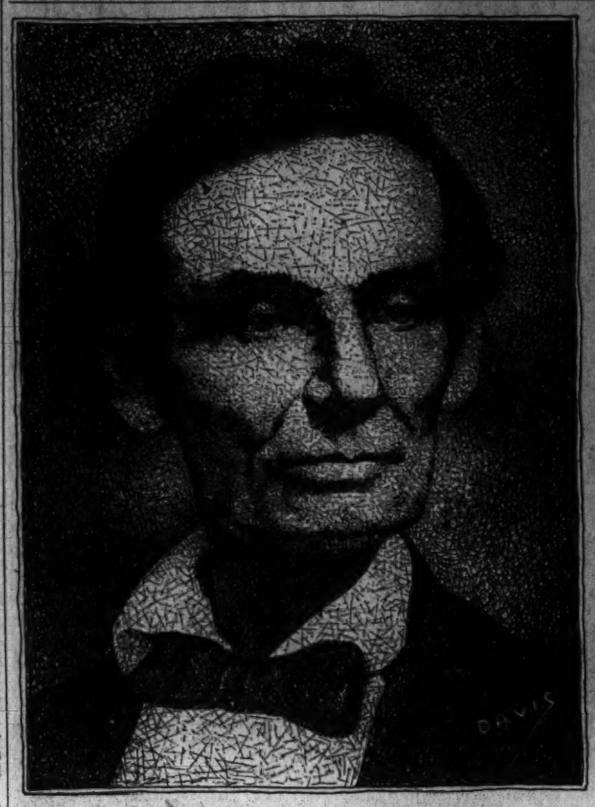
Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

Abraham Lincoln—Ann Rutledge



The names of Abraham Lincoln and Ann Rutledge are immortally linked in one of the tenderest and most tragic romances in the history of America's great. She was his first love and when her death ended their brief hour of happiness he fell into such despair that his friends feared he would not survive his grief. Time somewhat healed the wound, but he never forgot the sweet maid of his youthful love.

Emancipator's First Love Taken by Death 'Ere They Could Marry.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

There is a quaint old cemetery in New Salem, Ill., now a mere tangle of brush and blackberry bushes and faint outlines of ancient graves. Over one lowly grave—or at least what was once a grave, for the mortal remains which once it sheltered have been removed to another spot—is a plain inscription traced on an old board which reads as follows:

Old Concord Cemetery.

This marks the original grave
Of Ann Rutledge, born January 7, 1813, Died August 25, 1835.
Abraham Lincoln made many pilgrimages
Alone to this sacred spot. He often said
"My heart is buried there with Ann Rutledge."

Ann Rutledge is buried now in Oakland Cemetery, southwest of Petersburg, Ill. It has become a place of pilgrimage for those who cherish the fragrant bloom that lingers around the memory of a first love—that flight of the spirit into the realm of romance never quite equaled again in the span of any lifetime.

Poet's Tribute to Girl.

The text of this romance, as it were, might be taken from the inscription over Ann Rutledge's second grave. It is a passage from Edgar Lee Masters' "Spoon River Anthology" and it is a gem of poetic inspiration.

Out of me unworthy and unknown
The vibrations of deathless music!
"With malice toward none, with charity for all."

Out of me forgiveness of millions toward millions,
And the beneficent face of a Nation
Shining with Justice and Truth.

I am Ann Rutledge who sleep beneath these weeds
Beloved of Abraham Lincoln,
Wedded to him, not through union
But through separation.
Bloom forever, O Republic
From the dust of my bosom.

One hundred and twenty-five years ago today a child was born amid the storm and stress of a wild February morning in an humble log cabin in Larue, formerly Hardin County, Ky. Born in poverty, he was endowed with spiritual riches by the fates which rule the destinies of mankind. There was little to speculate upon as to future greatness in the babe, Abraham Lincoln, who on that February day long ago opened his dark, mysterious eyes to a life that was to be for him one of sorrow and travail, although he was to bring happiness and hope to countless thousands, and write his name high on the golden scroll of the great and the good.

Birth Year of Many Great.

As Nancy Hanks Lincoln lay there proud, no doubt, of the fact that she had brought a man child into the world, she had no knowledge of the fact that 1809 was an "annus mirabilis" in human history. There are years that in every century seem set aside from their fellow years because of the rich gift of notable lives they bestow upon the world. Lincoln's year mates deserve passing notice even in so brief a story as this perforce must be. They included Tennyson, Poe, William Evarts Gladstone, Chopin, Mendelssohn, Oliver Wendell Holmes and that delicate poetic genius—Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

And with the mother insight and longing for her sons to achieve, Nancy Hanks saw beyond the narrow confines of Rock Spring Farm which might bound the world for the father, Tom Lincoln, for the babe in her arms it was to be but the beginnings of things temporal.

What the world owes to Nancy Hanks and her dreams for her son never can be paid to her now. Wherever a man or woman in the name and memory of Nancy Hanks and her son Abraham helps a lad on his way to education and service to his fellow men there is a true tribute to her memory. Lincoln himself acknowledged her influence on his life when he said tenderly in after years, "All I am and all I hope to be I owe to my angel mother."

The direct guidance of Nancy Hanks was brief as years go in the life of Lincoln. Worn out by the ceaseless toil of pioneer women she died when Abe—as he was affectionately called from his boyhood to the dread hour of his assassination. With tear-dimmed eyes, little Abe helped his father fashion the rude coffin in which she was buried on October 6, 1818, near the present village of Gentryville, Spencer County, Ind. The next year Tom Lincoln brought a stepmother into the primitive home, Mrs. Sarah Brush Johnston, a woman who did her full duty by her stepchildren. As though she were his real mother, she recognized the coming glory of the lad and urged him to study and to greater intellectual endeavor—not a difficult task with the lad's abiding thirst for knowledge.

Schools, of course, were rare and teachers few. For some time Abe's only library was the Bible, a life of Washington and one of Henry Clay. His entire schooling in five different schools is said to have amounted to less than 12 months' tuition in all. Nancy Hanks had taught him to read and in early boyhood he had read and reread the Bible, Aesop, Robinson Crusoe, Pilgrim's Progress and a history of the United States. Out of such literary pay dirt came the classic of the Gettysburg Address. Burns and Shakespeare later became his favorite poets. From them and from the Bible he gathered that vast understanding of human nature which was one of his most enduring traits of character.

Meets Ann Rutledge.

By the time he was 17 years, he was 6 feet 4 inches tall, was athletic in tendency and had participated in wrestling matches, races and weight-lifting bouts in the neighborhood and had gained a reputation as well of being a two-fisted fighter.

It was when he was in his early twenties that he went to New Salem, Ill., where romance was to spring into sudden and brief blossom for him.

The daughter of the tavern keeper was Ann Rutledge, of good pioneer stock, lovely to look upon, descended from a South Carolina family which boasted a signer of the Declaration of Independence, a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and a leader in an early Congress among its members.

Abe Lincoln often met Ann Rutledge in the "spell down" and simple entertainments of the region. Later on he boarded at the Rutledge tavern. Alas, for his loving heart, Ann was betrothed to another, one John McNeil, proprietor of the best store in Salem. So Abe put aside his dreams of romance and concentrated on the grammar Ann and he studied together out of a little volume in the firelight.

On the flyleaf of the grammar he wrote the legend "Ann Rutledge is now learning grammar."

Her Fiance Vanishes.

John McNeil did not fear Lincoln's friendship with his bride-to-be. He knew Abe to be honorable and he knew Ann's heart was all his at the time and that she looked upon Abe then simply as mentor and friend.

Then the clouds arose in the skies of their romance. John McNeil left for the East with the excuse that he would return soon. Then marriage bells were to ring for him and Ann.

No letters came from him as the months slipped by. The neighbors whispered that Ann had been jilted. Abe was hurt by this talk and by the despair he saw growing in Ann's sweet eyes as she called vainly day by day at the little postoffice in Offut's store in search of the missive so slow to arrive.

At last it came, but it bore shocking news. McNeil wrote hinting vaguely at reasons why he could not return to her. She wrote pleading letters in answer. Two more came to her and then all was silence again.

With innate chivalry, Lincoln threw himself into the breach and began to pay open court to Ann, publishing far and near that he would be proud to win what the other man evidently had not cared to keep.

At first Ann did not respond to her new lover's attentions. She was too bruised and too hurt. But little by little Lincoln drew her away from her sad thoughts and they began their lessons again. When he was elected to the Legislature in August, Ann saw that here was a man indeed, and her fancy turned to him. In December when he rode away for the winter of law-making at Vandalia, she waited now for letters that came from him with unceasing regularity. They drew pictures of an ambitious future for them, they told eloquently of happenings at the then State capitol.

When he came home they had a happy summer together, reading Shakespeare and Burns and they planned to be married when he should be admitted to the bar. Ann was to attend the academy at Jacksonville so she might train herself for her life as the wife of a legislator.

Then with tragic suddenness her health began to fail. One day when Lincoln returned from a business trip in the county, he found her mortally ill. They told him she was dying, and he spent an hour by her side in her last conscious moments.

Death Blights Romance.

What passed between them in that hour of parting no one ever knew. A look of sorrow was in his eyes when he stumbled out of that death chamber, as though a soul gone blind and groping. Two days later, Ann Rutledge died.

It was months before Lincoln found it possible to rally from the blow and the shock of her loss. For a time his mind seemed darkened, and his melancholy increased so much that his friends feared that his grief might even end in a suicidal mania.

When the winter came, amid the blasts of a tempestuous storm one night he arose and went to the door and looked out into the wild night. Suddenly, he cried out, in utter desolation:

"I can not bear to think of her out there alone, in the cold, the darkness, and the storm." The tears came, the ice of his frozen heart melted away in their healing balm.

But he never forgot her. Often he said: "My heart is buried in the grave of that sweet girl."

Yet Time assuaged it, for youth will be served, and even the Lincolns a ..ng us are but mortal, and Ann Rutledge became but a treasured sweet memory when he married Mary Todd in 1842.

He Became Her Sweetheart When Faithless Wooer Failed to Return.

Gallows of Chance

By E. Phillips Oppenheim.

The Story Thus Far.

A masked gang kidnaps Sir Humphrey Rossiter, England's Home Secretary, as he returns to London in a hired automobile after visiting Lord Edward Keynsham in Norfolk County. The leader demands he grant a reprieve to Cecil Brandt, doomed to be hanged the following morning for murder. Refusing, Sir Humphrey is placed upon a gallows and told he will be executed. A messenger arrives with word that Brandt's wife is waiting to see Sir Humphrey at his London home with new evidence. He is released.

Hearing Mrs. Brandt's story he decides to grant a reprieve. She leaves and he faints as he picks up the telephone to call the prison. When he is revived he learns that Brandt has been hanged.

Mrs. Brandt, accepting his invitation to dinner, vanishes. Scotland Yard operatives, summoned to Sir Humphrey's home, learn he has disappeared. Young Detective Pank goes to Norwich and discovers that Lord Edward Keynsham had engineered the abduction by the masked band, that a disreputable character, Humble, acted as "executioner" and that an old film studio was used as the "prison" to which the Home Secretary was taken. Lord Edwards' former chauffeur drove the hired automobile. Sir Humphrey returns home unexpectedly and amazes his household.

"Very good, sir. We are—I'm sure every one will be—we are very glad to see you back again, Sir Humphrey."

The latter nodded in not unkindly fashion.

"Thank you, Parkins," he said. "The nursing home was severe and in many respects inconvenient. I was glad to get away. Home, after all, is the best place when one is not feeling quite up to the mark."

"And Mrs. Brandt, sir?" the man ventured.

His master raised his eyebrows.

"Oh, you are thinking of the Sunday night when she didn't arrive for dinner. She apparently wrote a note which I never received. Mrs. Brandt is quite well, I believe. Go and ring up Carthew at once."

"You will pardon me, sir," Parkins said, looking back from the door at his master's apparel, "but your second best dinner clothes will have to do. You were wearing your best ones last time we saw you."

Sir Humphrey nodded.

"So I was," he remarked indifferently. "The second best ones will do quite nicely. I am not leaving the house."

Sir Humphrey, who was dressed in a very well-cut blue serge suit, descended by the front stairs and made his way to the library, where fortunately a fire had been lit each day. Parkins found him there, when he entered a few minutes later, leaning back in an easy-chair and reading the morning paper with interest.

Secrecy Pledge Recalled

"Parkins," his master said, as he accepted the tumbler of whisky and soda, "you will remember when you entered my service I told you that there were two qualities I appreciated in a servant?"

"I remember something of the sort, sir."

"One was never to show curiosity and the other was silence. Remember that, please. I have been away and I have returned.

"If you read the morning papers you will see that I have been in a nursing home. You can accept that item of news as the true and only explanation of my absence. You can leave the whisky on the sideboard and put my clothes out. Light a fire in my bedroom. As soon as Mr. Carthew comes he can be shown in here."

"Very good, sir," the man murmured. "Certainly I will remember what you say, sir."

"The unusual circumstances of my departure," Sir Humphrey continued, "the fact that I left by the window, and in dinner clothes, you can forget. What really happened was simple. I worked myself into a nervous state of anxiety over the nonarrival of my expected guest. I felt unwell and went out to see my doctor. He sent me to a nursing home for a few days."

"I quite understand, sir."

"Sir Humphrey, thank God you are back!" Carthew exclaimed, as he came breathlessly into the room a quarter of an hour later. "This is a wonderful surprise."

It was obvious that the young man had struck the wrong note. Sir Humphrey frowned irritably.

"Thank God for what?" he demanded.

"Don't Be Absurd."

"Why, for finding you back again, sir, safe and well. I could scarcely believe my ears when Parkins told me over the telephone."

"My dear lad, don't be absurd," his employer enjoined. "I left a trifle hurriedly, perhaps, but that was no one's business except my own. I'm glad to see you had the good sense to keep everything out of the papers."

"Scotland Yard saw to that, sir. The stipulated time would have been up tomorrow, though. We couldn't have kept your absence a secret any longer?"

"That may be why I've come back," was the dry retort. "I hope you have brought the Russian papers with you."

"Certainly, sir. I brought them and all the other letters which you ought to see."

"I'm ready to start at once," Sir Humphrey announced. "Draw that little table to the fire. I don't think the chauffage has been working."

"Certainly, sir," the young man assented, doing as he was bid. "First of all, though, hadn't I better be doing some telephoning? We ought to let people know you are back. Scotland Yard, for instance."

"Scotland Yard? Good heavens, no!" Sir Humphrey scoffed. "I hope they haven't been making a fuss just because I chose to go away quietly for a few days. That's the worst of Matterson. He scents mystery and crime everywhere. * * * No, I don't want to ring any one up, Carthew. Get out the papers while I light my pipe. We'll do an hour or so's work before dinner."

A Little Grimace.

"What about the P. M., sir?" the secretary queried.

His chief indulged in a little grimace.

"Well, I suppose you had better just report to him," he consented ungraciously. "Don't make any fuss about it. Say that I found the nursing home uncomfortable, that I'm much better, and that I decided to return here this afternoon."

Carthew, who was still feeling rather like a man in a dream, did as he was bidden. Presently he looked across the room, the receiver in his hand.

"The Prime Minister insists on having a word with you personally, sir," he announced.

"He would," the Home Secretary muttered, rising to his feet. "All right. Give me the extension."

He drew the instrument toward him.

"Hello, sir," he began. "This is Rossiter speaking."

"My dear fellow, how wonderful!" was the prompt and enthusiastic reply. "How amazing! Wherever did you turn up, and where on earth have you been to?"

"Everyone Upset."

"Everyone seems very upset at my return," Sir Humphrey observed gruffly. "I only went down to a nursing home for a few days. I wasn't feeling quite the thing, but I'm all right now. Carthew is with me and we're going into that Russian business. I shall be here until I go to bed if you want me. Tomorrow I shall be at Whitehall, and in the House in the afternoon."

"But tell me——"

"Rotten connection, isn't it?" Rossiter interrupted. "I can't hear a word. See you tomorrow."

He rang off and put the receiver on the hook with a grin which was reminiscent of his old self.

"That will stop old Tresham for a bit," he remarked. * * *

For two hours Sir Humphrey went through an accumulation of papers, and Ronald Carthew confided afterward to several of his associates that he had never known his chief so brilliant or so lucid.

His decisions, always correct, were almost instantaneous. He seemed to have recovered all his energy.

"Well, that's everything, sir," the young man said at last, packing up his dispatch case. "A wonderful afternoon's work, Sir Humphrey, if you'll allow me to say so. I thought it would have taken at least two days to clear up all these things. Shall I come here in the morning, sir, or be at Whitehall?"

Considers Matter.

The home secretary considered the matter.

"You had better stay here in the house," he decided. "Your room will be ready for you, I'm sure. You can send for your typist, if you like, or you can write the necessary letters yourself and be at hand in case I want you again. Besides, there's that infernal telephone. I expect that will be going half the evening."

"I'll be on hand, anyway, sir," Carthew promised, as he took his leave.

Modern Business Woman Can Easily Convert Restricted Space Into Attractive Apartment

Miss Maxson Reveals How Best Decorative Effects May Be Obtained.

By Jo Ellen Maxson.

No longer does the modern business woman come home to a drab, cheerless room after a strenuous day at the office She needs not only a room to sleep in, but also a room where she can receive her friends, a room that can be converted into an attractive background for gay, informal little suppers and lunches.

One-room studio apartments with fresh, new color schemes and ingenuous furniture arrangements give the business woman an opportunity to enjoy her leisure hours in surroundings of comfort and good taste.

Synthetic Venetian Blinds.

A delightful apartment designed to meet the limitations of a small budget has a color scheme of rose, white and green The rug is of moss green with an indistinct striping of lighter green and the woodwork is painted flat white. Finely dotted wall paper is used with a scattered pattern of pink nosegays.

The windows are draped in coarsely woven rose linen, beneath which are white roller shades plaited to resemble Venetian blinds. They can be raised or lowered from both top and bottom and the plaits are held in place by tapes run through the perforations.

Desk-Dressing Table.

A studio couch which opens into comfortable twin beds, has a tailored slip cover of green jasper chintz. On either side are small walnut tables which hold books and smoking accessories. The lamps have creamy Italian pottery bases and white parchment shades with applied cut-out designs. White, besides being a smart decorative note, gives an airy, spacious feeling to a room.

A slant-top desk with pierced brass handles and hinges, is placed against the opposite wall. With a mirror in a graceful walnut frame hung above it, the desk serves also as a dressing table. The drawer space beneath provides ample storage for clothing without imparting a bed-roomy appearance to the room.

A narrow walnut table in front of the windows has extension leaves concealed at either end, so that it can easily be lengthened to accommodate as many as six covers for an after-theater supper. Or without the extensions, it is a convenient tea table. A nearby wing chair, upholstered in rose linen, with bindings in heavy cream cotton fringe, carries out the color scheme effectively.

The Federal Diary

By Morgan Baker
(Trade-mark Applied For)

THIS is Montana Day in the Federal Diary's Parade of the States. We find Montana well represented in Washington's Governmental and social activities. In our research, we discovered a romantic story of this State, with its vast resources in minerals and agriculture.

BAKER.

Next in the Parade of the States will be Massachusetts. We are anxious to learn of new arrivals from all sections of the country and their activities in Washington. The Diary invites all Federal employes to send in items about fellow workers from their home State.

To Montana.

Where the prairies stretch to the blue bowl's rim
'Most as level as a floor;
Where the mountains reach for the noon day sun
With glaciers covered o'er;
Where cattle graze a million strong
They have wheat fields a section long;
Mine gold and copper, silver, zinc
And carry dollars that will clink—
That's Montana of the open range,
A grand old State—may she never change!

MONTANA is the third largest State in the Union in size, occupying 146,997 square miles, larger than Austria, Ireland and Scotland combined. In population it ranks 39th. The name is derived from the Latin adjective montana, which means mountainous. Because of the great natural resources within its borders, it has been called "The Treasure State."

The first white men to visit the region were French hunters, traders and explorers headed by Pierre de la Verendrye. The party, setting out from a trading post at Lake of the Woods in Canada in April, 1742, reached what is now the southeastern part of Montana in January, 1743. It was not until 60 years later that white men again set foot in what is now Montana. President Jefferson, following the purchase of the Louisiana Territory from France, sent Capts. Meriwether Lewis and William Clark to explore the new American domain. The party of explorers set out from St. Louis in 1804 and reached the 104th meridian line on April 27, 1805. It is this line that today divides North Dakota from Montana. From here these intrepid explorers made their way past the fall to the Three Forks of the Missouri, up the Jefferson and Beaverhead Rivers, then overland through western Montana. Then they went down the Columbia River to the Pacific. A young Montana Indian woman named Sacajawea, serving as a guide, contributed greatly to the success of the exploring party. Her name is beloved by all Montanans.

The next half century was largely one of slow development. It was the period of the fur trader and missionary. During the years 1858 to 1865, the discovery of gold attracted hundreds to Montana. In 1864 the Territory of Montana was created by act of Congress. The ensuing years saw the development of a great mining activity and the spread of cattle ranching. These were picturesque days. A colorful page was added to Montana's history. Vigilante organizations were formed to deal with the rough and lawless element in the principal mining camps. Indian troubles gave rise to numerous battles and skirmishes with the settlers. This unfortunate situation was not finally settled until the late 70's.

On February 22, 1889, President Cleveland signed the omnibus Statehood bill that started Montana on the long sought goal of Statehood. It is this anniversary that the Montana Society of Washington will observe soon at a reception in honor of the Montana Congressional delegation and other distinguished citizens of that State.

Montana became a State when President Benjamin Harrison issued a proclamation November 8, 1889.

In the last 60 years the population of Montana has increased from 20,000 to 537,000. The six largest cities are: Butte, one of the most famous mining camps in the world; Great Falls, Billings, Missoula, Anaconda and Helena, the capital.

Copper, gold, silver, lead, zinc, coal and petroleum are produced in vast quantities by Montana. Many famous fortunes have been made in Montana. The William A. Clark fortune, made in Montana mines, was spent liberally on amassing a great collection of art, which is now housed in the Corcoran Gallery in Washington. The smelter production figure for 1932, despite the depression, was $125,000,000.

Cattle and sheep ranching are extensively engaged in. The number of sheep and lambs in 1933 was estimated at 4,049,000 and yielded 32,800,000 pounds of wool. Cattle are said to have numbered 1,378,000. These two activities have contributed much to the picturesque background of Montana. The Montana cowboy figures in tale and ballad.

Farming, especially in the eastern part, plays an important role. The wheat harvest in 1932 was 55,610,000 bushels from 4,070,000 acres. Orchards on the western side of the divide produce a valuable crop of apples, cherries, &c. Oats, flaxseed, barley, rye, corn, hay, potatoes and sugar beets also yield abundant substantial incomes. The size and quality of the farm crop has been greatly increased by the irrigation projects of the Government and private firms.

Montana's mountain regions offer a summer playground for people the world over. Wholly within its borders is located the unsurpassable scenery of Glacier Park. The rugged mountains and beautiful lakes of this region are enjoyed by thousands of tourists every year. A small section of Yellowstone Park is also located in Montana.

DR. WILLIAM M. MANN, of Helena, is director of the National Zoological Park and one of the world's foremost authorities on animals in captivity. He has written numerous books, including "Wild Animals In and Out of the Zoo," and many scientific and popular articles.

DR. MANN.

Dr. Mann is a member of the following organizations: American Ornothological Union, Society of American Naturalists, Washington Entomology Society, Biological Society, Mammalian Society, Masons, Shrine and Sigma Xi Fraternity. He holds memberships also in Cosmos Club, Harvard Club and Explorers Club.

CHESTER C. DAVIS, of Butte, is head of the Agriculture Adjustment Administration, having recently succeeded George N. Peek. The two have been associated in thought since 1921.

DAVIS.

Mr. Davis came into contact with the late Henry C. Wallace, father of the present Secretary of Agriculture and holder of that post under President Harding. Wallace invited him to Washington and later made a place for him in the department.

Mr. Davis was on the Peek committee of 22, representing 22 States which scored the Coolidge veto of the McNary-Haugen bill. With Peek, too, he bolted the Republican party when Frank Lowden failed to get the presidential nomination in 1928. Peek was chairman of the "Smith Independent Organization" in 1928.

Since last May, Mr. Davis has been production manager of AAA, running the campaign for reduction of production in cotton, wheat, tobacco, corn and hogs. About the only thing for which he takes "time out" is a game of handball. He is said to be well skilled in slapping a small, hard rubber ball around a four-walled court.

New U. S. Minister.

W. W. McDowell, Butte mining operator, is the new Minister to the Irish Free State. Mr. McDowell was born in Trenton, Tenn., and went to the Rocky Mountains 37 years ago, where he developed Montana's first copper mine and founded a fortune.

McDOWELL.

From 1909 to 1913 he was speaker of the Montana House of Representatives. He has served the Democratic party through four campaigns. He first made his home at Anaconda and later moved to Butte.

FRANK C. WALKER is executive secretary of President Roosevelt's Recovery Council. The council is composed of members of the Cabinet and the many lieutenants of President Roosevelt who are striving for national rehabilitation. They have been meeting every Tuesday at the White House instead of the usual Cabinet session. At these meetings with the President, ideas are threshed out, policies delineated and progress on the many lines reviewed.

WALKER.

THE Montana Society will hold a reception, dance and card party at the Roosevelt Hotel on February 23, William H. Harrison, Library of Congress, society president, announces.

The reception will be in honor of the Montana delegation in Congress and other distinguished Montanans in Government service. The following will be in the receiving line:

Representative and Mrs. Roy E. Ayers, Representative and Mrs. Joseph P. Monaghan, W. W. McDowell, new U. S. Minister to the Irish Free State; former Representative and Mrs. Evans, Commissioner and Mrs. Harry B. Mitchell, Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Walker, Mr. and Mrs. Chester C. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. J. Bruce Kremer, Dr. and Mrs. William M. Mann, former Representative Jeanette Rankin, Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Wilson.

The party will mark the society's observance of the anniversary of the signing by President Cleveland of the bill which started Montana on the way to Statehood. All persons from Montana, and particularly new Federal employes, are invited to attend. Information and tickets can be obtained from Miss Ruth Lacklen, Indian Affairs Committee, Senate Office Building, or from any of the following officers of the society:

Mrs. James Brickett, Senator Erickson's office, vice president; William O'Mahoney, AAA, vice president; Joseph McCabe, Senator Erickson's office, vice president; Allan Zamavsky, vice president; Don Reardon, AAA, vice president; Frank Portillo (*), G. P. O., recording secretary; Bill Campbell, Senator Erickson's office, and Joe Wright, treasurer, Senator Wheeler's office.

ONE of the leading advocates of remonetization of silver is Senator Burton Kendall Wheeler, of Butte, senior Montana senator.

Senator Wheeler is chairman of the Indian affairs committee and is a member of the following important committees: Agriculture and forestry, interstate commerce, manufacture and pensions.

Senator John E. Erickson, of Kalispell, former governor, is the successor to the late Senator Walsh. Mr. Erickson is a member of the following committees: Education and labor, mines and mining, postoffices and post roads, public lands and surveys.

Civil Service Survey.

Another detailed survey of the Civil Service organization and procedure is being made by a committee composed of Chief Examiner Lawson A. Moyer, Ismar Baruch, chief of Personnel Classification Division, and Lewis Meriam, of Brookings Institution.

The new investigation is supplementary to the one made last summer by Mr. Lewis and Brookings aids. Some important changes followed the Brookings report.

Under direction of Mr. Barush, a number of his assistants in classification are making a thorough investigation of all branches of the commission's office to discover, if possible, opportunities for changes in the interest of economy and efficiency. The committee will report to the commission for decision as to any changes recommended.

Diary Guest Tickets.

IF your name in this column is followed by (*), call in person on the Federal Diary editor between 4:30 and 6 p. m. You will receive tickets to Loew's Fox (stage, cast of 60 in Earl Carrol's "Vanities;" screen, "Six of a Kind"); or to Loew's Palace (second week of "Moulin Rouge"); or to Loew's Columbia (Will Rogers and ZaSu Pitts in "Mr. Skitch"). Persons whose names appear on holidays call for tickets the next day.

Commissioner of Customs James H. Moyle will address the Utah Junior Democrats of Washington at 8 p. m. today at the Burlington Hotel. All interested in Western politics are invited to attend.

Mrs. Frances Lytton (*), Bureau of Engraving and Printing, retired, entertained a group of her former office associates at a card party Saturday. First prize was won by Mrs. Dolly Greybull. Guests included Mrs. Belle Johnson, Mrs. Frieda Norred, Miss Mildred Ryan, Mr. and Mrs. T. M. Ferguson and their son, T. M., jr. Music was furnished by Norman Ryan and Charles Bayley.

Crowds at Post Home Increase

Model Dwelling at Colonial Park Draws Many Sunday Visitors.

Sunday found more visitors at The Washington Post model home than any other day of exhibition with the exception of the opening one. Interest in this marvelous dwelling continues unabated.

The Post's new exhibit house is in Colonial Park, adjacent to Alexandria. The beautiful residence was constructed by R. L. Kane Co., Inc., and is owned by Charles Henry Smith. Kenton D. Hamaker, of Clarendon, Va., was its architect. The home is furnished by Hutchison's, Inc., and the draperies and curtains are by J. F. Ligon. It will be open for inspection Sunday and daily from 11 a. m. until 9 p. m. until further notice.

To visit the home, drive over Long Bridge, then turn right on the upper road to Alexandria and on to Colonial Park, entrance of which is marked by two brick columns of colonial design. Turn into the entrance and proceed to the summit of the hill.

Another route is over Memorial Bridge, turning left at Arlington Cemetery and continuing straight to Russell road, or the upper road to Alexandria, then turning right to Colonial Park.

Los Angeles Flood Laid to Forest Fire

U. S. Officials Say Bare Soil Loosed Torrents.

Fire caused the flood which cost 41 lives and $5,000,000 in property damage in Los Angeles County early in January, the Interior Department announced yesterday. The flood was attributed to the burning of chaparral and other vegetable growths and the forest litter in a widespread blaze last November 21-24.

Experts of the soil erosion service, Geological Survey, Forestry Service and engineers of the Los Angeles flood control district conducted the investigation. They held that had the vegetation remained, the rainfall, which was not of unprecedented volume, would have been absorbed.

As it was, the downpour sealed the surface of the soil with muddy flows, and most of the water rushed down the steep slopes, carrying mud and debris with it to the canyon bed.

Bethesda to Discuss Street Car Service

The street railway service in the Bethesda area and improvement of Wisconsin avenue will be discussed at a special meeting of the Bethesda Chamber of Commerce, Wednesday at 8 p. m., in the County Building at Bethesda, Md.

The special meeting was called in place of a session last Monday, which was postponed.

Radio Waves and Ripples

AS soon as N.B.C. engineers figure out a way of installing a microphone in a new oxygen mask the Red Cross has developed, we are to have a broadcast from the bottom of New York harbor.

Capt. Charles B. Scully, of the Red Cross, as soon as weather permits, will do the broadcast as an incident of his testing of the mask.

Scully's mask is supposed to permit anyone to step off into the harbor anytime wearing nothing more than a couple of tanks of oxygen, a few weights and a bathing suit. It ought to be a lot of fun. Also it would be a great help in recovering the body of a drowning person in 75 feet or more of water in time for artificial respiration to be successful. The present method of using grappling hooks usually takes too long.

Present rates of foreign exchange have encouraged the new dealers to start a stay-at-home movement, aided and abetted by the National Broadcasting Co.

They'll call it a National Park Year, though one would have thought that four years of depression have made a large element of our citizenry pretty familiar with our parks by this time.

The name was suggested by Interior Secretary Ickes, who will start a series of talks boosting it March 3. Mrs. Roosevelt's "National and State Parks Ideal Vacation Areas for Family Use" will come several Saturdays later.

—N. B. C. press release.

To persons who still want to argue about radio censorship, we suggest for study an agreement recently reached between two baseball clubs in Chicago and the city's principal broadcasting stations. It provides that, in return for permission to broadcast accounts of next summer's games, the stations shall each offer five free periods of advertising on the days on which games are scheduled. Further, it imposes limitations on the contents of the broadcasts, guaranteeing the ball clubs that all comments on the play-by-play, weather conditions, decisions of umpires, fights, accidents and anything that happens within the park shall be favorable. No negative comment, no criticism of the players is to be permitted.

Improvement of reception of the Byrd broadcasts to 90 per cent intelligibility was to have been expected with the transfer of KFZ from the Jacob Ruppert to Little America, according to Dr. Orestes H. Caldwell, president of the Science Forum of the New York Electrical Society.

RUTH ETTING
has come back from Hollywood to sing twice a week to the accompaniment of Johnny Green's orchestra on Columbia.

"I was much gratified at the splendid radio reception from the Byrd expedition Saturday night," Dr. Caldwell said. "This confirms the expectations of the radio engineers that the Byrd transmitter, when taken off the ship and set up on the ice with a regular antenna, would deliver a strong, clear signal to the intermediate relay point at Buenos Aires. It will be equally interesting to watch the results attending the next step, setting up a directive antenna aimed at South America."

A Republican view of the New Deal is to come from Senator David Reed, of Pennsylvania, spokesman for the Hoover Administration, on N.B.C. Saturday night. His subject, "A Republican Looks at the New Deal," is scheduled for 20 minutes starting at 8 p. m.

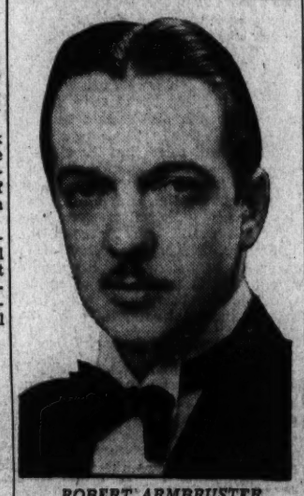
Violinist Toscha Seidel will be a guest artist of the Big Show in its first performance from Columbia's Radio Playhouse in New York tonight at 9:30. Taylor Holmes and Mady Christmas also will appear on the program in short sketches written by David Freedman. Seidel will play a Beethoven Rondino in an arrangement by Fritz Kreisler and the familiar "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes."

John Drinkwater's "Abraham Lincoln" by the Dramatic Guild will be part of Columbia's observance of Lincoln's Birthday this afternoon at 4.

Takoma Park Honors Lincoln This Evening

A patriotic program will be given tonight in celebration of the anniversary of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln by the Takoma Park Citizens Association at the Takoma Park Branch of the Public Library at 7:30 o'clock.

Frederick B. Linton will give an address on Lincoln and others will speak, including Dr. William A. Hooker, chairman of the historical and memorial committee of the association. A short business session will precede the exercises. William K. Norwood will preside.



ROBERT ARMBRUSTER

Gen. Hines Discusses Veterans' Regulations

New regulations affecting veterans' relief, issued by President Roosevelt, were discussed yesterday by Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, administrator of Veterans' Affairs before 100 veterans at the Powahatan Hotel.

Gen. Hines spoke of the differences between the legion program and the recent regulations given out by the President. He dealt with the regulations as they affect hospitalization and the increase in the rating table.

Assembly Term Half Finished; Nothing Done

Liquor Control Measure Only Bill Advanced in the Least.

By J. K. Irving, Jr.

Charlottesville, Va., Feb. 11.—Half the legitimate time of the Virginia General Assembly is already used. Not a single matter of prime importance has been disposed of.

The session, of which, for some cause or another, so much was expected, got off to a shambling start and is moving into the half without appreciably mending its gait.

The four principal subjects for consideration and action—the liquor control plan, the tax program, the racing bill and congressional redistricting—may still be called the headliners, but they are getting nowhere, except that the control plan, which should have been disposed of long ago, seems to be in a fair way of passage if it can be edged into the sun long enough to admit of the customary formalities.

It came before the session with practically tamper-proof support and has withstood impregnably the several desultory forays made for the purpose of liberalization.

Measure Well Regarded.

It is plain to see that the measure, which almost surely stands today as it will remain on the date of passage, is as well regarded by the temperance people as any liquor measure could be. Anyway, they have had nothing to say against it. As a matter of truth, they got all they could have hoped for reasonably at the hands of the commission which did the framing prior to the meeting of the legislature.

All the opposition has come from those who have held the dispensary in disfavor and as such backed an effort on the part of hotels and restaurants to sell by the drink.

Of course, Senator Wickham, dissenting commissioner, and his devoted following will have their say so when the bill gets into the upper House. That is expected to have no more effect than to further delay final passage. The dispensary plan, as is, is a foregone conclusion.

To return to the laggard fashion in which the assembly moves: The real delay has been caused by Gov. Peery himself. His determined attitude with respect to increased taxation has caused a revolution. An attempt to get the legislators behind him by offering a compromise has been unproductive thus far. The disposition in the Capitol seems to be a general opposition to any increases.

The governor finds himself at a distinct disadvantage. When he offered his tax plan as the Legislature convened, he undoubtedly harbored the belief he would be able to control the representatives. It was astonishingly higher than that recommended by Gov. Pollard in the tentative budget, but Peery declared it was needed for the public school system and for the highways; he would continue, therefore, to press its passage. He counted, too, upon the educational organization, which is one of the most powerful political factors in the State.

Press Also Hostile.

But the people, regardless of affiliations and factions, are tender on the subject of taxation. Legislators, fresh from campaigns in which the only interest they could arouse came from promises of public economy, have counted the pulse beats. Besides, the Governor encountered a hostile press. Day in and day out, the newspapers have been hammering his plan. And that, of course, heartens members of the Assembly.

The compromise offered, which would fix levies to yield $850,000 instead of $1,136,000, can hardly be regarded a concession on Peery's part. Rather, it may be looked upon as a foothold by means of which other forms of taxation will be revived. Either the Governor or the Assembly will win; the people are with the Assembly, and it is hardly going too far to say that Peery's own political organization does not approve wholeheartedly his position.

Whatever else may be said, the present exchange between an obstinate executive and a balking legislature is not conducive to speed. Unless the Governor is defeated, the delay will be doubly costly.

Teeth Stolen

Why? Police Are Hunting Mysterious Motive.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.). State police are puzzled over the motive prompting a thief to break a show case and carry away a number of sets of false teeth.

The teeth would be of little or no value to the thief and of small comfort to him even if he should by chance find a set that should nearly fit.

Police are hunting some other deep and mysterious motive. The teeth were stolen at the office of Dr. William H. Kelly in Wheeling.

Saville Report Analysis Urged

Charlottesville Committee Will Ask City Council to Reconsider.

Charlottesville, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Aroused by the Charlottesville council's refusal to join in a move to have Dr. John Bauer, New York utilities expert, analyze the Saville report on the Virginia Public Service Co., a group of local citizens has appointed a committee to confer with council in an effort to have it reconsider its action.

The committee, named by Homer Richey, chairman of a mass meeting at which the action was both assailed and defended, is made up of Frank Hartman university superintendent of buildings and grounds and district CWA administrator; Cliv Quarls, local business man, and Jesse Wilson, Charlottesville attorney.

Several speakers at the meeting held here declared that the Saville report was unduly prejudicial to the power company and should not be allowed to go entirely unchallenged in the public hearing before the State Corporation Commission on March 15. The sentiment of these was that if Dr. Bauer was not the man to study the Saville report, then some one else should be employed.

Others contended that the city already had entered upon a study of its own franchise with the Virginia Public Service Co., and pointed out that possible litigation over this franchise would call for considerable expenditure. They held that an attack against the Saville report would constitute a waste of funds, coinciding in this belief with that held by the local council.

Firemen's Bazaar.

Waynesboro, Pa., Feb. 11 (Spl.). Burgess J. W. Croft and R. E. Long, formerly of Frederick, president of the Waynesboro Advertising Club, were the speakers last night at the opening of a bazaar here to raise funds for the 1934 Cumberland Valley Volunteer Firemen's Association convention here in August.

Staunton CWA Jobs Pushed To Completion

Roanoke Is Urged to Provide Funds for Job Bureau.

Staunton, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Of 19 civil works projects approved for Staunton, 9 have been completed; 9 others are from 20 to 80 per cent complete, and 1 not started.

Deputy State Administrator Willard F. Day said the District Five pay roll decreased 323 men the week ended February 10.

The week's pay roll was $36,000.

Staunton's pay roll for the week was $3,450. Seventy women in civil works service projects drew an additional $618.

In Augusta County, 862 employes received $5,275.

Job Bureau Funds Urged.

Roanoke, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—S. A. Minter, chief factory inspector of the State Department of Labor, again is urging city council to enlarge its $372 appropriation to the State Employment Service Bureau here.

Mr. Minter urged the council to appropriate $2,400 to be used after July 1, to obtain an appropriation by the Federal Government.

Mr. Minter said there is danger of losing the bureau if the appropriation is not made. A survey shows the bureau has registered 7,715 persons, 5,838 of whom have not been placed.

Tree Planting Favored.

Danville, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—The Danville Garden Club's plan of beautifying the city through a CWA project has been accepted by the public works committee of the city council.

It is proposed to plant juniper trees on a triangular space on North Main street, where stands a memorial to the Rev. J. W. Moffett, Danville minister.

Cherry trees are to be planted on the grounds of the city power house and cedar trees on the lawn of the City Hall.

Loan Stumps Salem.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.). The city of Salem has been awarded a $75,000 loan and grant from PWA funds but does not know what to do with it. The grant was allowed for a sewage disposal plant and one adequate for all purposes can be constructed for $35,000 or $40,000.

In consequence, a committee headed by Mayor Linn B. Farrell plans to go to Charleston and confer with the State Advisory Board on Public Works and see if the grant can be reduced.

Original plans for the sewage plant were included in a proposal to build a new city hall with a jail, a fire station and city departmental offices. Only $50,000 was desired for this double project. Later the city attorney informed the council that he did not believe a loan could be obtained for the city hall, so that was dropped. But the grant went through for $75,000.

Charles Town, W. Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—The Jeffers County CWA pay roll last week was $4,066.76, to 486 men. This is an increase of $300 over the previous week.

Fairmont Heights Citizens Meet.

The monthly meeting of the Fairmont Heights (Md.) Citizens Association will be held tonight at 8 o'clock at the Fairmont Heights School.

The Prince Georges County Retail Grocers Association will meet tomorrow night in the county police court room at Hyattsville.

Work Projects In Winchester Meet Approval

Weekly Pay Rolls Over State Show Some Decreases.

Winchester, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.). C. L. Todd, engineer and State Civil Works Administration inspector in Virginia, and C. M. Stoddard, district inspector, after inspecting projects in Winchester reported favorably on the low unit costs.

The inspectors gave special praise to the Town Run bed extension project.

The pay roll for 220 men here last week was $2,503.

Warsaw, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—The Richmond CWA has paid more than 475 men and women $16,000, and has purchased material valued at $6,600.

The CWA Safety Bureau, with assistance of Dr. A. Ray Dawson and the local Red Cross, trained 15 men to act as first-aid inspectors on projects here.

Projects being developed include repairs to 20 school buildings, grading public landing at Totuskey Bridge, building of a wharf and retaining wall at Jones Creek on the Rappahannock River and at Carters Wharf; improvements to the jail, Warsaw; laying of 1,200 feet of sidewalk in Warsaw and Shraps, and collection of tax and business data.

Front Royal, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Chester A. Duke, county CWA disbursing officer, has announced Warren County projects pay rolls were $38,708.65. The pay roll last week was $3,596.47.

Heathville, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Three hundred and ninety Northumberland County men last week were paid $3,127.78 for the Civil Works Administration labor.

Firemen to Hold Banquet Tonight

Robertson to Be Speaker at Winchester Affair.

Winchester, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Representative A. Willis Robertson will be the principal speaker at the annual Charles Rouss Fire Company banquet here tomorrow night.

He will be introduced by former Mayor W. W. Glass, who will be toastmaster.

The banquet will be the fortieth consecutive one in honor of the birthday of Charles Rouss, whose benefactions made possible the work of the company a half century ago.

Van Court Heads Democratic Body

Chevy Chase Reorganizes at Bethesda.

Justice of the Peace Fred K. Van Court was elected president at the organization meeting of Section 8, Chevy Chase Democratic Organization Committee held at the County Building, Bethesda, Md. S. H. Miller was named secretary.

The group adopted the block system of supervision of electors. Members were assigned to each of the 20 blocks of the section. County Commissioner Robert D. Hagner spoke.

The committee discussed possibilities of tax rate reduction and the majority appeared to consider restoration of recent salary reductions for county policemen, school teachers and other county employes as more desirable.

Service!

Operator Brings His Still to Revenue Officers.

Charlottesville, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.). Revenue officers of Charlottesville contend Albert "Spriggins" Shifflet did them a big favor, but "Spriggins" maintains it was all a big mistake. He didn't mean to bring the still to them.

Three officers went raiding near Alberene and found the spot where Shifflet had his mash hidden. Just then "Spriggins" came bouncing through the woods in his automobile with the still on the running board, all ready to start operating where the mash was stored.

He saw them, but it was too late to escape. He pleaded guilty in magistrate's court and took a $50 fine and a 30-day suspended jail sentence.

—the abc of pipe tobacco

The best tobacco for pipes comes from Kentucky..and it's called "White Burley"

WE use White Burley in making Granger Rough Cut. It comes from the Blue Grass region of Kentucky—ripe, mild leaf tobacco that just about tops them all for fragrance and flavor.

From the right place on the stalk we select the kind that's best for pipes. Then we make it into Granger by Wellman's Method—and cut it up into big shaggy flakes.

White Burley tobacco—made the way old man Wellman taught us how to make it—that's Granger.

"Cut rough to smoke cool" is the way pipe smokers describe Granger—try it

Relief Probe Surprise, Say D. C. Officials

Halbert and Wilson to Give "Every Aid in" Investigation.

"Nothing to Hide," Says Welfare Board Head of Allen Action.

An investigatoin into operations of the District Emergency Relief and the Board of Public Welfare, as proposed by Commissioner George E. Allen, will be welcomed by the respective heads of the two units, they said yesterday.

Leroy A. Halbert, head of the District Emergency Relief, declared he will be willing to cooperate with a competent investigator in looking into affairs of his department.

"We have done our best in the face of an increasing volume of work," Mr. Halbert said, "and I am sure there has been no neglect in any phase of our operations. I have always had satisfactory cooperation from Commissioner Allen and I want to extend to him all the help possible. Everything in the District Relief is open to investigation. The more they know the better it will be."

Officials Exhibit Surprise.

"We are always open to investigation," said George S. Wilson, director of the Board of Public Welfare. "Every facility at our command will be available to an investigator. We have nothing to hide. I shall be glad to be helpful in every way possible."

Answering charges of inefficiency, Mr. Wilson observed there is room for improvement in every organization, but that he is unaware of any flagrant instances of inefficiency in his department.

Mr. Halbert admitted that certain phases of the relief work might be improved upon, but pointed out that the emergency nature and the volume of demands necessitated speedy action. He asserted relief workers have done their best under pressing circumstances.

Commissioner Allen's decision to investigate relief here was the first intimation the two officials had of any complaints of inefficiency, they said. Both appeared to be surprised.

Allen Holds Situation Serious.

That Commissioner Allen views the situation as serious is reflected i nhis request to Federal Administrator Hopkins for an investigator, expected to be named today.

In announcing the investigation, Commissioner Allen emphasized that he does not suspect any financial irregularities, but wishes to determine whether the relief units are functioning as "business organizations."

The infestigation is understood to have been precipitated to a great extent by the failure of the emergency relief to provide satisfactory service and supplies in the school lunch program. Mr. Halbert declared the relief department functioned as afficiently as possible in face of the short notice given.

Building Figures Please Sec. Ickes

Survey Shows Steady Rise, He Asserts.

An F. W. Dodge Corporation survey showing that construction is undergoing a rapid increase was claimed as evidence yesterday by Secretary Ickes that the Public Works Administration program is providing a sharp stimulus to business.

According to the survey, the dollar volume of publicly financed contracts for January of this year was four times that of the preceding January. The report covered 37 States east of the Rocky Mountains.

The January volume was placed at $157,477,000, as against $155,862,800 for December. The increase over December was considered significant, the report pointed out, because the period ordinarily shows a decline.

1,100 Pounds of Beef; Just a Pot of Soup Harrington Prepared for School Lunches

Restaurateur Finds Joy in Preparing Food for Children.

Eleven hundred pounds of diced beef, 800 pounds of potatoes, 200 pounds of carrots, 150 pounds of onions and 100 pounds of turnips in one vegetable chowder.

That will be the main dish for 5,517 needy children at the lunch to be served today in 92 district schools.

The food was prepared throughout Sunday by a staff of 24 persons under the direction of Earl E. Harrington, local restaurateur, who has been in charge of preparing and distributing the school lunches since the program began. Mr. Harrington will continue doing this work until the entire program is taken over by the Government at a central kitchen.

Hard-boiled eggs will be added to the school lunches for the first time tomorrow. A total of 460 dozen eggs from Federal surplus supplies will be prepared and sent out by Mr. Harrington. The eggs will be served two or three times a week.

Supplementing today's menu of vegetable chowder will be large quantities of butter, whole wheat bread and fruit, also from Federal surplus supplies, and a half pint of milk to each child. Five hundred and seventy-five loaves of bread will be sent out each day. On the days when eggs are not served, a piece of cheese or corned beef will be substituted.

1,000 Not Included.

Although 92 schools will be included the service beginning today, 15 buildings with 1,000 children in need of food have yet to be included. These schools are now being equipped with facilities to keep food warm and serve it. The schools now being served include a number of parochial schools, where 625 children will receive the lunches, in addition to the District schools.

While Mr. Harrington is carrying on as chef to the hungry school children, work will go forward in equipping the central kitchen in the old Manual Training School at Wisconsin avenue and Q street northwest. In preparation for the opening of this kitchen, Mrs. Katharine McK. Ansley, who was brought here from St. Paul to direct the program, is assembling her staff of workers and making other plans. The workers will be enrolled from the ranks of the CWA employes, and must be passed on by the CWS and health authorities before they can be admitted.

Satisfaction over the manner in which Mr. Harrington has handled the program was expressed by Mrs. Ansley after a conference with the restaurateur last week. Mr. Harrington told the new director he hoped to be able to assist her in inaugurating the new program.

Service Is Reward.

"As I have been preparing these meals for 6 cents each, there is very little profit in it for me," Mr. Harrington said, "but I have grown to love doing it, to know that I am making life easier for many an undernourished child. Even after the entire program is taken over by the Government, I hope to be given an opportunity of rendering some volunteer service."

Mr. Harrington, father of four children, came to Washington from Akron, Ohio, three years ago.

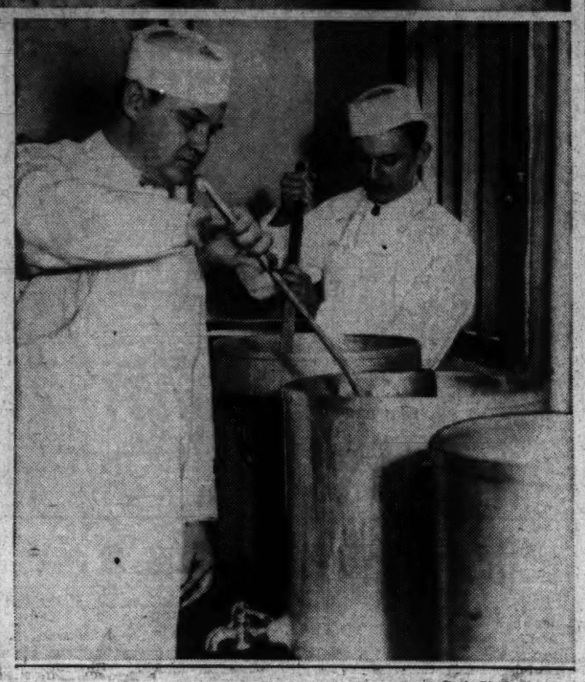
His eight trucks make two trips to the schools each day in order to cover the entire territory and deliver the necessary supplies. His kitchen and employes are inspected frequently by District health authorities.

The menu now being served would undoubtedly please Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt were she to make another trip of inspection, schools officials believe. At the time Mrs. Roosevelt made an unexpected tour she was distressed to find scanty meals, devoid of milk and fruit. Her criticism of this discovery led to the Government intervention in the situation and the importation of Mrs. Ansley to direct the program with Army officials cooperating.

Menus Were Improving.

Blame for the unsatisfactory meals has been placed with the District Emergency Relief. Mr. Harrington, in defense of the relief headquarters, declared that they had short notice and were making arrangements to have more food added to the menus when Mrs. Roosevelt made her unannounced tour. The First Lady's visit followed a formal and planned one conducted by Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, of the Board of Education, and other officials.

Day by day, however, the menus have been expanded. Reaction of the children to this increase in the amount of food is perhaps best illustrated by the words of a small colored boy, who, upon seeing one of Mr. Harrington's drivers arrive at his school the other day, exclaimed: "Say, mister, these noonday lunches is getting to be a dog!"



Post Staff Photo.

Harrington, who has been in charge of preparing and delivering the food, is on the right in top picture, with Claire Hamilton, a fellow worker. Displayed between them are the vegetables, butter and eggs to be served this week. Vegetable chowder is being prepared in the lower picture by Chefs Tom Shorts and Justis Harrington. The work that has been carried on by Mr. Harrington since the lunch program began is soon to be taken over by the Government under the direction of Mrs. Katherine McK. Ansley.

School Group Makes Choice Of CWA Art

Paintings for Classrooms Assured by Action of Committee.

Suitable pictures painted by CWA Administration artists for display in District schools have been selected by two members of the buildings and grounds committee of the Board of Education. Henry I. Quinn, the third member, will make his inspection today.

Mr. Quinn will confer with the two other members, Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, chairman, and Charles H. Houston, before final selection is made.

Mrs. Smith, chairman of the committee, expressed enthusiasm over the work, and said she hoped the program may be continued for the benefit of the schools. Recommendations probably will be made to the art committee for specific pictures, she said.

The art work for the schools is on display at the Corcoran Art Gallery. Mrs. Smith and Mr. Houston were accompanied on their inspection by Duncan Phillips, chairman of the art project committee.

Action by the Board of Education committee is a distinct reversal of the attitude of school officials when the school art work was first proposed. At this time, the school heads attempted to pass the matter over to the District Commissioners with the explanation that they had nothing to do with placing art in schools.

Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou, said, however, that he has been interested in the project and believes it should be encouraged in every way. He has recommended already that a painting be done of William Howard Taft, for display in the new Taft Junior High School.

Crash of Auto And Fire Truck Injures Three

Owner of Small Machine Held After Collision in Northwest.

Three persons, one of them a fireman, were injured early yesterday when an automobile and fire truck collided at Third and E streets northwest.

Private Samuel C. Settles, 32, attached to No. 14 Engine Company, was taken to Emergency Hospital with several fractured ribs and severe lacerations. He was relieved from duty to return to his home, 5307 Fifth street northwest.

Police said the fire engine was struck by the machine of Roy W. Gregory, 18, of 469 Maryland avenue southwest. Gregory and his brother, Lewis Gregory, of Staunton, Va., also were treated at the hospital for lacerations and bruises.

Roy Gregory was arrested and held at the First Precinct Station for investigation. William P. Bateman, 39, driver of the fire truck, escaped injury.

The first engine was answering an alarm at North Capitol and H street. A short-circuit had ignited the wiring system of a parked automobile.

Duhamel to Address Boy Scout Stamp Club

James F. Duhamel, philatelist and historian, will be the principal speaker before the Boy Scout Stamp Club the evening of February 22 at 1018 Vermont avenue northwest. Eagle Scout Roger Kirk is president of the club.

Mr. Duhamel is the immediate past president of the Collectors Club of Washington. He will discuss Washington, the Man and the City, as related to stamp collecting. All Scouts and Scout leaders interested in stamp collecting are being invited.

Two Sliders Injured On High Street Hill

Two youths were recovering yesterday from injuries suffered Saturday night when their sled upset on High street hill southeast.

Milton Chase, 20, of 2322 High street southeast, and Jerry Smith, 20, of 1414 Ridge place southeast, were hurt on the legs and body when the sled crashed into a tree.

Capital Joins Drive Aimed At Tolerance

Nation-Wide Campaign Seeks Peace Between Rival Religions.

Schools Here Asked to Help in Washington Birthday Week.

With the view to eliminating misunderstanding between persons of differing faiths, an intensive educational campaign is to be launched throughout the country by the National Conference of Jews and Christians, Prof. Boyd Carpenter, of Georgetown University, chairman of the Washington committee of the conference, announced yesterday.

Plans for the campaign were completed by Newton D. Baker, co-chairman of the conference, prior to his departure for Europe last week, Prof. Carpenter said.

Will Work in Schools.

The campaign was prompted by a recent tour of 38 cities, including the District, by a Catholic priest, a rabbi and Protestant minister. In 35 cities permanent committees of lay and clerical leaders were organized.

High schools, both public and private, will be asked to invite a Catholic priest, a Protestant minister and a rabbi to address student assemblies on "The American Tradition of Religious Freedom," during the week of George Washington's birthday.

Youth organizations in churches and synagogues will be asked to discuss civic relationships of Protestants, Catholics and Jews.

Women's Committee Planned.

A woman's committee of 1,000 members will be formed under the leadership of Mrs. Dorothy Canfield Fisher to parallel the existing men's advisory council of 1,000 National community leaders.

Dr. Carpenter explained the purpose of the conference is to furnish schools with materials to clear up misunderstandings which create friction, and to stimulate frank discussions by church young peoples groups of Protestant-Catholic-Jewish relationships.

Members of the Washington committee, in addition to Dr. Carpenter, are Maurice D. Rosenberg, Rossa F. Downing and Miss Katherine F. Lenroot. The National headquarters are at 289 Fourth avenue, New York. Everett R. Clinchy is director.

Conference of Faiths Proposed.

A general conference of Protestants, Catholics, Jews and other religious faiths was proposed in a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the United States Civil Legion here yesterday.

"Consideration of the moral conditions obtaining in the Nation and of possible plans to correct them," was given as the reason for the legion's proposal.

Another resolution adopted assured President Roosevelt of the support of the legion "in his efforts to lead the country back into prosperity through safe and sound economic principles and practice."

It was decided that the eighth annual convention of the organization will be held October 12 and 13 in Louisville, Ky.

CWA Extends School Relief

Registration of Students for Part-Time Jobs Opens Today.

Registration will begin today for students who wish to defray part of their cost of education at George Washington University through part-time jobs made available through the CWA.

Applicants are advised to apply at the office of the president of the university, Twenty-first and G streets northwest. They must show that they have proper qualifications for college entrance and fulfill the requirements as set forth by the CWA to receive salaries under the relief plan.

Students just graduated from high schools and those who have had some college work, but have been obliged to drop out, are eligible to receive aid.

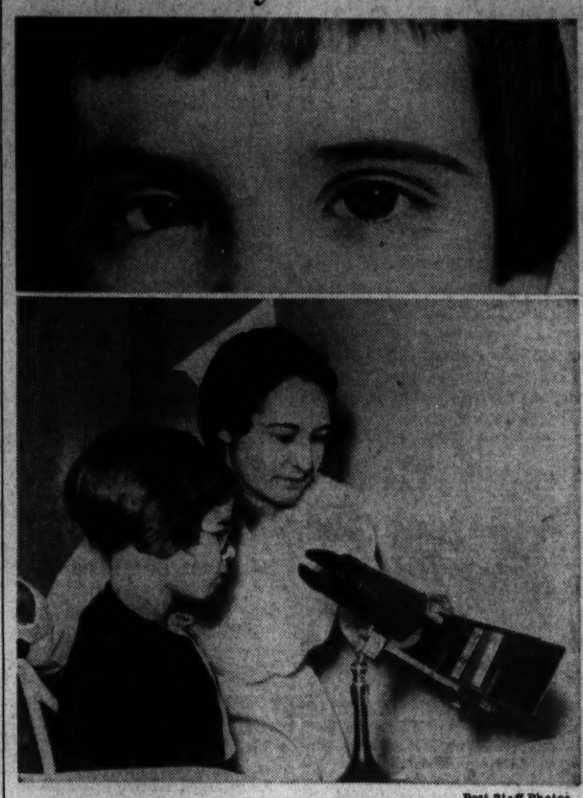
Several hundred part-time jobs will be made available through cooperation of the university with the Federal relief. Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou is cooperating with Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president of George Washington University, in execution of the plan. Many students enrolled in post-graduate courses in Washington high schools are expected to register.

Brown Talks Tonight At Teachers College

The Newtonian Society will be addressed by Maj. E. W. Brown, superintendent of police, at 8 o'clock tonight at Wilson Teachers College. Maj. Brown will discuss "Crime and Its Detection."

Also on the program will be Inspector F. S. W. Burke, Lieut. J. H. Fowler, Detective Sergeant C. H. Larson, Ira N. Gullickson, Edwin R. Donaldson, Lieut. J. L. Kelly and Sergt. A. R. Beall, all of the police department.

New Clinic Undertakes Cure Of Cross-Eyed Children Here



Post Staff Photos.

100 Already Given Aid; Few Operations Fail, Says Doctor.

Washington's Cross-Eyed Clinic, conducted weekly at Children's Hospital under the direction of Dr. Frank D. Costenbader, of 1726 I street northwest, has undertaken the task of straightening the eyes of many District youngsters.

The clinic, which is slightly more than six months old, already has treated between 75 and 100 children, and in the majority of cases Dr. Costenbader, founder of the clinic, and the nurses and assistants who work with him feel possibilities for complete cures are excellent.

"Almost always it takes from two to three years to definitely cure a cross-eyed condition," said Dr. Costenbader, "so we have little to guage our success by just now."

The clinic is one of the regular phases of the hospital. Similar clinics in other child disorders are held. The cross-eyed treatment period, however, is one of Washington's newest clinics.

Operations Performed.

An average of about 12 children attend it each Friday when it is opened at 1 o'clock. These represent many varieties of cases. Recently full facilities for operations have been installed and up to date two successful operations have been performed.

Three stages are necessary in the curing of cross-eyes, physicians agree. These represent three definite campaigns or attacks on the disorder.

First the crossed eye must be restored to vision. Ordinarily the crossed eye is not used at all in seeing by the patient, and eventually becomes blind. When the patient learns to use the eye, blindness is averted.

Next, the crossed eye must be straightened, either by glasses or by an operation.

Last, the two eyes must be taught to work together, focus together and function together.

Last Phase Most Difficult.

According to Dr. Costenbader, the first two phases of the cure are easier than the last. Operations, feared tremendously by many people, seldom have poor results.

"I've never known of a case where a patient was any worse off for the operation," Dr. Costenbader asserted.

It is the difficult process of the final phase of the cure which makes the time for a complete cure so long. Getting the eyes to function together is sometimes a discouraging task, but it has been accomplished successfully many times.

Approximately two children out of every hundred in Washington are cross-eyed, according to the estimates of physicians.

Business Club Offers Aid.

Recently the American Business Club has become interested in the cross-eye clinic. Members have volunteered funds for the aid of the little patients, although they have specified no definite amounts.

One of the most unusual accomplishments of the clinic has been the placing of spectacles on a baby 8 months old. First the frames, without lenses, were fitted on the child. When the young patient had become accustomed to the frames the glass was put in, and the process of correcting the vision was under way.

Six Youths Escape Home at Blue Plains

Six escaped inmates of the Home for Boys, Blue Plains, D. C., were sought by police last night.

Ranging in age from 14 to 17 years, the youths were believed to have made their way into the city to hide in the homes of friends or relatives. They were sentenced to the institution for various minor crimes.

Catholics Here Observe Pope's Anniversary

Notables to Attend Mass at Catholic U. Marking Pius' Coronation.

A solemn high mass will be celebrated in the crypt of the National Shrine on the campus of Catholic University at 10:30 a. m. today in observance of the coronation of Pope Pius XI as the 260th successor to St. Peter. Similar observances will be held in National capitals throughout the world.

The celebrant will be the Very Rev. Egido Vagnozzi, S. T. D., secretary of the apostolic delegation. The sermon will be preached by the Most Rev. Andrew J. Brennan, D. D., Bishop of Richmond. The Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, apostolic delegate to the United States, will preside at the mass and will receive distinguished guests in the reception rooms of the shrine. The latter will include members of the Diplomatic Corps, led by Sir Ronald Lindsay, British Ambassador. Postmaster General James A. Farley and Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper will attend.

The faculty and student body of Catholic University will be led by the Most Rev. James Hugh Ryan, Bishop of Modra and rector of the university. Seated before the altar will be the Most Rev. John N. McNamara, Auxiliary Bishop of Baltimore; the Rt. Rev. Charles DuBois Wood, of Middletown, N. Y.; the Right Rev. Eugene J. Connelly, of Washington; the Very Rev. John J. Burke, C. S. P., general secretary of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, and other distinguished clergymen.

Pope Pius XI was born at Desio, Italy, May 31, 1857, and was ordained a priest December, 1879. He was appointed Apostolic Visitor to Poland in 1918 and raised to the rank of nuncio in 1919 and made a bishop in the same year. On June 16, 1921, he was made Cardinal Archbishop of Milan and on the following February 6 he was elected Pope. His coronation took place six days later.

Brown Funeral Today At Charles Town, W. Va.

Charles Town, W. Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Funeral services for J. Walter Brown, 59, former Episcopal Church vestryman, who died Friday after a paralytic stroke, will be held tomorrow at the Episcopal Church.

D.C. to Honor Lincoln With Rites Today

President's Wreath to Be Placed at Memorial.

Organizations to Pay Tributes on 125th Anniversary.

Washington will be mindful today of the Civil War President as impressive tributes are paid to the memory of Abraham Lincoln on the 125th anniversary of his birth.

At Lincoln Memorial more than 40 patriotic organizations will join with the District Commandery, Military Order of the Loyal Legion, in a special program, while throughout the city in schools, churches and auditoriums will be heard the story of Lincoln's life and in many the "Gettysburg Address" will be read.

Gatherings at Washington Cathedral will see for the first time the statue, "Lincoln at Prayer," which was recently presented by Mrs. William T. Hildrup, jr., of New York City. It is believed to be the only statue in existence showing Lincoln in prayer.

World War veterans, sons of men who fought on both sides in the War Between the States, will join the Grand Army of the Republic and affiliated groups in paying tribute at 12:15 p. m. today at exercises before the big, bronze statue in Lincoln Memorial.

Senator Lewis to Speak.

Senator James Hamilton Lewis will be the speaker at the exercises conducted by the G. A. R. at 8 p. m. at the First Congregational Church. The pew in the church formerly occupied by the late President Calvin Coolidge will be reserved for honored guests. Lieut. Col. U. S. Grant 3d, representing the Sons of Union Veterans, will read the Gettysburg Address.

Groups at the Memorial will hear the invocation pronounced by Dr. Thomas E. Green. Representative Kent E. Keller, of Illinois, will deliver a brief address. The Marine Band will furnish music. The escort of the National and commandery colors will consist of soldiers, sailors, marines and coast guardsmen under arms.

On behalf of President Roosevelt a wreath will be placed by Lieut. Col. Edwin M. Watson, U. S. A., while another will be laid at the feet of the Emancipator by Maj. Paul A. Hodson, U. S. A., on behalf of the District Commissioners.

Organizations to participate in this ceremony are the Loyal Legion of the District, Lincoln Post, No. 17, of the American Legion, American Legion Auxiliary, American Women's Legion, District Chapter of the American Red Cross, Tztec Club District Society of the Children of the American Revolution, District Society of the Dames of the Loyal Legion, District Society of the Daughters fo the American Revolution, Daughters of Union Veterans.

Federation of Women's Clubs, Grand Army of the Republic, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, Italian World War Veterans, Kallipolis Grotto, Military Order of Foreign Wars, District Commandery Military Order of the World War, National Patriotic Council, Reserve Officers Association of the United States, Sons of the American Revolution, National Sojourners, Sons of Union Veterans, Spanish-American War Nurses, UnUited Spanish War Veterans, United Spanish War Veterans Auxiliary, Daughters of 1812, Vaughn Bible Class of Calvary Baptist Church, Auxiliary Post to Veterans of Foreign Wars, Phil Sheridan's Corps No. 12, Woman's Relief Corps and Burnside Corps, Woman's Relief Corps.

The committee in charge of arrangements includes Col. Lawrence C. Crawford, U. S. A., chairman; Capt. Chester Wells, U. S. N., Charles Mason Remey and O. A. C. Oehmler.

Others connected with the committee are Senator and Mrs. Felix Herbert, Mrs. Wallace H. White, jr., Mrs. William Fitch Kelley, Mrs. S. Wallace Dempsey, Mrs. Thomas W. Phillips, jr., Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, Ferry K. Heath, John Q. Tilson, Philip P. Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel J. Prescott, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Newton, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore G. Joslin, Joshua Evans, jr., Robert H. Lucas, Col. Ord Preston, Lawrence J. Richey, Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Clark, Mrs. Charles H. Pardoe, Miss Edna M. Patton and James E. Watson.

Good morning! Today is Lincoln's Birthday and we are reminded of the character of the Presidents with which our country has been blessed. In our time in Washington we have known Presidents of many personalities, but all of them observe the traditions of a free people in a way that makes it particularly thrilling to us to do business in Washington.

Football Chiefs Alter Three Rules, Adding Strength to Offense

2 Changes Eliminate Penalties on Passes; Third Involves Punts

More Open Game Is Predicted After Action at Atlanta; Number of Clarifications Are Approved.

ATLANTA, Feb. 11 (AP).—The national football rules committee today held out a helping hand to the offense, altering three portions of its code to give more strength to the attacking team.

The cry last fall that the defense had all the better of the game was heard by the committee to the extent that it lifted the touchback penalty on the first incomplete forward pass thrown over the goal line and removed the 5-yard setback inflicted after a second successive incompleted forward pass.

The third change was the rewording of the definition of a punt to allow a teammate to hold the ball until the kicker has made contact.

These changes will be a great help to the offensive team and should result in a more open game next fall, said Chairman Walter Okeson and Secretary W. S. Langford at the conclusion of the committee's annual meeting here today.

Goal Line Pass.

The first incomplete forward pass over the goal line—except on fourth down—henceforth will result only in the use of a down and not in loss of possession of the ball. This should see many teams try a pass over the goal line in cases where previously they would not risk the gamble on an early down.

The spreading of the defense to guard against this new pass threat also should add diversification to the offensive team's running attack near the goal line.

Under last fall's rules when a team failed to complete a forward pass over the goal it lost possession and the ball was given to its opponents on their 20-yard line.

The removal of any penalty for successive incompleted forward passes takes away the quarter back's fear of the customary 5-yard forfeiture for a second successful pass and likely will also lead to a more open game.

The change in the definition of a punt merely allows a player to hold the ball on a punt until another player has kicked it. Previously, when one player held the ball on a quick kick he was required to drop it before another player came in contact with it. This alteration was made to aid the kicker in making a better punt.

The widely publicized proposals for rule changes, such as the increasing of the side line zone from 10 to 15 yards and permission of forward passes anywhere behind the scrimmage line, failed to muster support of the committee.

Rules Are Clarified.

A number of clarifications in the rules were approved and referred to the codification committee. Two of these relate to equipment, one having to do with the surfacing of leather used in the manufacturing of footballs and the other with material used in shoe cleats.

"The effect of rule changes made for the increased protection of players is already apparent and statistics show that for the second year deaths attributable to fooball have been reduced," a statement issued by the committee said.

Team Quits in Protest To D. C. Boys' Playing

Baltimore, Feb. 11 (AP).—The Maryland Pilgrims, a basket ball team composed of former Southern Conference college athletes, today had the unique experience of having their opponents quit after the first half.

Outplayed by the Pilgrims, 32 to 6, the St. John's Club left the floor. The Pilgrims' line-up included Councilor and Garber, former Duke University students, Zahn, former George Washington U. star, and Skeet Atkinson, formerly of North Carolina State College.

St. John's contended that these men, who reside in Washington, D. C., are not registered locally with the A. A. U.

St. John's, 1933 champions, lost a recent first-half play-off series to the Pilgrims.

Harrisonburg Passers Have Successful Week

Harrisonburg, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.). With three double victories to their credit, the Harrisonburg High boys and girls basket ball artists completed a successful week. They defeated Bridgewater, Charlottesville and Shenandoah and the last two were played away from home.

The Harrisonburg Blue Streaks, District 4 champions a year ago, have won 12 of 13 games. Their only defeat was in an extra-period battle with Staunton High. Staunton plays here Friday night and the H. H. S. boys will be out for revenge. Harrisonburg journeys to Waynesboro Tuesday to battle a quint that defeated them twice last season.

Harrisonburg Teachers Beat East Stroudsburg

Harrisonburg, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.). The Harrisonburg Teachers College sextet again asserted itself as one of the strongest women's teams in the East by triumphing over the East Stroudsburg Teachers, of Pennsylvania. The score was 35 to 30.

Stroudsburg staged a spurt in the final quarter and once took the lead, but the Pennsylvanians could not cope with the sharpshooting of Miss Pittman, of Harrisonburg. She registered an even dozen field goals.

Line-ups:

Emory-Henry And Generals Top Race

Are Well Out in Front in State; Richmond in Third Place.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 11 (AP).—Emory and Henry's Wasps and the embattled Generals of Washington and Lee rode today at the top of the Old Dominion basket ball parade, each with an unblemished slate after three contests with Ole Dominion foes.

The Generals couldn't keep pace with the Wasps in contests with out-of-State foes, but no Virginia team has been able to halt "Cy" Young's fast moving lads.

The leaders were well out in front of the procession, with the University of Richmond's Spiders pulling up in third place with defeats at the hands of Emory and Henry and Roanoke College marring the record.

Vie for Fourth Place.

Randolph-Macon and Lynchburg's Hornets, in a nip and tuck battle for the Chesapeake Conference leadership, each with a single defeat, were tied for fourth place in the State race.

The Hornets, bumped out of the Chesapeake Conference leadership by Randolph-Macon's Wasps at Ashland, gained revenge the other night on their home court, 32 to 27, after a spectacular battle. It left the Chesapeake Conference race a hot battle between these two speedy quintets with the rest of the field apparently outdistanced.

There was no such race in the Virginia Conference, with Emory and Henry's classy Wasps, with Glen Roberts, one of the Nation's finest centers, still showing the way, out in front with a clean record.

Two Foes Beaten.

Washington and Lee kept pace with the Wasps by whipping both V. P. I. and William and Mary by convincing scores. The Indians tried to make a battle out of it in the second half, but the Generals with a final spurt won with points to spare, 44 to 27.

Emory and Henry, meanwhile, was gaining revenge for a licking administered by William and Mary last year to mar a brilliant record. The Wasps won handily, 43 to 28.

There'll be plenty of firing on the Old Dominion front this week with all of the State's teams participating in the firing.

Emory and Henry's supremacy will be tested in games with Richmond and William and Mary, both on the road, while Washington and Lee will meet Virginia Tech and Richmond in a pair of tussles that may have an important bearing on the State championship.

The schedule:

Monday—Hampden-Sydney vs. Bridgewater, at Bridgewater; Roanoke vs. Lynchburg, at Lynchburg; Washington and Lee vs. V. P. I., at Blacksburg.

Tuesday—Hampden-Sydney vs. Virginia, at Virginia; Emory and Henry vs. King, at King; Richmond vs. St. John's, at Richmond; V. M. I. vs. Maryland, at College Park; V. P. I. vs. North Carolina State, at Blacksburg.

Wednesday—V. M. I. vs. Navy, at Annapolis.

Thursday—Emory and Henry vs. Richmond, at Richmond; Roanoke vs. Bridgewater, at Salem; Randolph-Macon vs. American, at Washington; Washington and Lee vs. North Carolina State, at Lexington.

Friday—William and Mary vs. Emory and Henry, at Williamsburg; Randolph-Macon vs. Delaware, at Delaware; Virginia vs. North Carolina State, at Charlottesville.

Saturday—Hampden-Sydney vs. Lynchburg, at Lynchburg; Bridgewater vs. American, at Bridgewater; Richmond vs. Washington and Lee, at Lexington; Randolph-Macon vs. Gallaudet, at Washington; V. M. I. vs. V. P. I., at Lexington.

Ye Olde Ringworme's Pipe Dream —by Pierotti

Clairvoyant Cable Brings Tomorrow's Schmeling-Hamas Bout Today.

By Bill McCormick.

In order to give our public immediate (or even quicker) service on the Max Schmeling-Steve Hamas bout to be held in Philadelphia Tuesday, our Peering-Into-The-Future Department arranged a seance with Ye Old Ringworme, who went into a trance from which he emerged with the following ringside description of the impending battle.

Philadelphia, tomorrow night (Spl. via Clairvoyant cable)—Just as some 12,000 rabidly pro-Steve Hamas fight fans had become noisily confident that the flying fists of the cyclonic collegian were destined to propel Max Schmeling to the canvas and himself into the movies, as was the Black Uhlan's other conqueror—Mad Maxie Baer—der Deutsches Max emerged from his shell and smacked the Pride of Philadelphia right out of the picture.

A short right overhand direct hit on the chin whiskers in the tenth round was the blow that killed Philly, deprived Hamas of a possible chance to clinch Mae West with sound effects, set the handlebar mustachios of his manager, Charley Harvey, quivering agitatedly and projected Schmeling into the limelight as a contender for his lost laurels.

Schmeling on Offensive.

Following his usual cautious, methodical plan of battle from the opening bell, Schmeling carefully erected about himself a barricade of gloves and elbows which blocked completely or took the sting from 98 per cent of the continuous barrage of blows laid down by Hamas. Every so often, when it could be done without peril to his own person, the Nimble Nazi took pecking pot shots from the sanctity of his armor at the indefatigable former Penn State grid star.

As the bout progressed, these pot shots became more frequent and more vicious until the fatal tenth, when Hamas backed away with his arms down to take a deep breath following a furious attack which beat against the German's defense like an angry hornet against a screen door. Then, and not till then, did the good Schmeling's right hand land with all the fury and ferocity of which it is capable. Traveling scarcely more than 6 inches, the mighty mass of bone and leather crashed into the handsome Hamas' chin with a thud that almost caused Schmeling's 4-foot-8 manager, Joe Jacobs, to bite 8 inches off the 2-foot cigar he was smoking.

Collapses Gently.

An agonized expression crept over the erstwhile collegian's face and he collapsed gently like a deflated balloon. "One, two, three," commenced the referee and each time his arm rose and fell, the antenna-like hirsute adornment on the upper lip of Manager Charley Harvey sagged downward toward the ultimate picture of dejection it reached at "ten."

Interviewed after the bout, Harvey said, "We wuz ro——"

At this point, Ye Old Ringworme emitted a flock of static, which gradually brought him out of his trance. He explained later that the Clairvoyant cable line had suddenly become clogged, and that we'd have to wait until tomorrow night to find out what Harvey had to say about the fight.

Bath Five Triumphs.

Berkeley Springs, W. Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Displaying its fastest teamwork shown this season, Bath District High School five defeated the Shepherdstown (W. Va.) High five here, 38 to 20.

Heurich Streak Snapped by Trenton

Reds Bow to Moose Five, 22-17; Former Palace Stars Foes' Heroes.

THE Heurich Reds, local pro basket ball outfit, finally lost a ball game after eight straight wins, but it took the league leaders of the American pro loop—the Trenton Moose—to do the trick. The invaders managed to eke out a 22-to-17 count in a gerat flourish late in the second half. The game was played in the G. W. Gym.

Those three stars who made up the great Palace pro teams of half a dozen or so years ago—Rusty Saunders, George Galscoe and Bob Grody—dragged about the floor with a clever professional air.

Saunders, bigger and tougher than ever, scintillated in fine form, despite his threatening years; George Glascoe, continued his bounding rabbit-like scampering over the hardwoods as in days of old, and Bob Grody has not lost an iota of the fancy way he used to pass the leather.

Croson, Evans Star.

For Washington, Joe Croson, the former Duke flash, and Moon Evans played great games. Joe stacked up against the 6-foot 9-inch Tiny Hearne, former Georgia Tech flash, and played the Southern wonder boy completely off his feet. Evans tore off some beautiful shots from mid-floor and deserves most of the credit the Heurichs achieved, when they rode out in front at the half, 12-10.

In the second half, Glascoe tied the score at 15-15 after several fouls by both teams. It was at this point the former Palace players turned on the scoring juice. Spindell cracked through for a two-ply shot and followed up with a pair of fouls, to send Trenton into the lead, 19-15. Croson and Berger added charity flings, Spindell caught the tiring Red outfit off guard and plunked another through the hoop and added a foul for good measure for the final scoring of the game.

Medical Center Wins.

In the preliminary, the Army Medical Center defeated the Post Exchange quintet, 24-19. The winners held a 10-9 margin at the half.

Winchseter Moose Win From Hagerstown Five

Winchester, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Winchester Moose Basket Ball Team took the measure of the Hagerstown (Md.) Moose Quint here, 36 to 26.

At half-time the Marylanders were leading 17 to 15, but the locals put a new squad on the floor, which proved capable of annexing the margin necessary for victory. Nat Hawkins starred for the Winchester Moose with 10 points during the second half. Dorsey, Hagerstown guard, led the scoring for the visitors.

Guys I Like—No. 2

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Feb. 11 (Spl.).—This is the second article of a series known as "Guys I Like and Why." Only this time it isn't a guy, but a gal. Her name is Miss Charlotte Epstein, chairman of the W. S. A., which means Women's Swimming Association, of New York, and she is the person who has done more to develop swimming for girls and aquatics for women in general than any other person, living or dead. I like her because she is absolutely on the level, a square shooter, honest to the core, fearless, a fighter, outspoken, sharp with her tongue, keenly intelligent and an absolute authority on women swimmers and the conduct of their meets and excursions. In all her long career as sponsor of women's swimming she has never chiseled one red cent out of a game which might have made a less scrupulous person wealthy and comfortable.

She is a quiet, sharp-featured woman with black hair shot through with iron gray. She wears a pince nez and quiet clothing. She lives humbly and works for her living as court reporter in Brooklyn. Every moment of her spare time is devoted to the furthering of the sport that she loves and has done so much for, and every moment is given freely, without charge and without hope of gain.

At the time the Daily News A. A. ran the first of the great swimming carnivals at Jones Beach, the Olympic trials for women, Eppie, as she is known wherever there are gal swimmers, took her two weeks' vacation and came to the News office and worked on the show two weeks, nine and ten hours a day, and then refused to accept a penny of compensation for her working time. She said: "I simply can not take money out of swimming. I wouldn't feel right if I did. Somehow it wouldn't be the same to me afterward. I never have. I guess I won't start now."

She can not be bribed or bought and she can not be bullied. She is the smartest politician of the entire A. A. U., knows all the ins and outs of petty intrigue, with which the organization is shot through, is a shrewd trader, knows all the weakness of her fellow members, keeps most of them in terror of her and usually gets her way. She has one passion, which is swimming for girls, and one care and thought, and that is for the girls who do the swimming. She is as jealous guarding the amateur status of the girls who swim for her, or whom she chaperons, as she is of her own. She is just as quick to fly at the throat of some chiseling promoter whom she catches trying to run a swimming meet on a shoestring and cheat the girls out of prizes to which they are rightfully entitled.

She will not permit her girls to accept gift merchandise from publicity-seeking firms. Their expense accounts are carefully watched and tabulated, and yet she once withdrew all of her girls from a meet because the promoter thereof had planned to give them shoddy and worthless prizes in the form of purses. The promoter retired puzzled and then had a brilliant inspiration. He placed a $10 bill in each purse and returned them to Eppie. "There," he said, "is that all right now?" What the blistering Eppie gave him is a classic even in this age of invective.

She is a strict, but liberal chaperone, a martinet whom the girls both fear and love because she never forgets that they are young, vital, full of fun and life and entitled to enjoy themselves within the bounds of reason and propriety. A great judge of character, human strength and failings, she handles each girl individually, gets the most out of her. While actually the head of a women's swimming club in New York City, there isn't a girl swimmer in the country from Maine to Florida and from the East Coast to California who doesn't adore her and wouldn't respond any time Eppie called for her, or go where she went.

At a swimming meet she is as nervous, excited and fussy as a mother hen, flutters about looking after her chicks and yet keeps the shows running at a high peak of efficiency at all times. She will fly at any writer or reporter who writes anything disparagingly about women's swimming or women swimmers. She knows how to get publicity for her girls and her meets, and you will never find her in camera range or posing for her own picture. In her youth she was a competitor in a minor way, and when she stopped racing she bent every energy to developing others.

She is responsible for Gertrude Ederle, Eleanor Holm, Riggin, Wainwright, Meany and a host of stars. She is feared and hated by her many enemies whose weaknesses and pettiness she has never hesitated to expose. She is loved by her friends and every one who knows and respects an honest, courageous and yet tender woman.

Sholl's Beats Saranacs For 75th

'33 Amateur Champions Keep Streak Intact, Winning, 34-23.

Keisel Leads in Attack, Making 17 Points; Boys Club Wins.

SHOLL'S unbeaten basket ball team rang up its seventy-fifth consecutive victory yesterday afternoon at the Washington Boys' Club by conquering the Saranacs, first-half winners of the Community Center League, 34 to 23, in a game in which the District A. A. U. unlimited titleholders dominated from the very start.

Given a warm battle for the first five minutes of play, the Sholl's basketers trained their heavy artillery on the elusive hoops and shot into a 22-11 lead at half time. Hal Keisel, elongated center, furnished the big scoring punch during this period, and was materially aided by the stellar passing of Carroll Shore and Joe Robey.

Sholl's maintained its steady passing and shooting pace in the second half, and with ten minutes to go was 30-18 ahead.

Keisel Scoring Star.

Keisel easily proved the scoring star with seven field goals and three free tosses to his credit for a total of 17 points, while Smith, of the Saranacs, was the big noise for his team with 11 points.

The Boys' Club varsity, with Center Beach as the spearhead in the attack with his 14 points, toppled Fort Washington, 38 to 31. Sammy Stein, late of George Washington University, elected to concentrate most of his work in passing, which he did successfully. The Clubbers led, 38-31, at half time.

The Sholl's management yesterday announced the booking of a game with Hack Wilson's Martinsburg Elks, of West Virginia, for next Tuesday at the Boys' Club. Brooklyn's celebrated star has guaranteed his appearance, but not in a playing role. He is the team manager.

West Virginia Meets Hoyas Tonight

GEORGETOWN has the double opportunity of strengthening its position in the Eastern Intercollegiate Conference and avenging a previous defeat when it plays West Virginia tonight at Tech High School starting at 8:45 o'clock. Only one other game is scheduled, Catholic U. vs. Baltimore, at Brookland.

West Virginia came from behind in the last few gasps of its first tilt with the Hoyas to tie the score and finally win out in two extra periods, 37-32. It was a close and thrilling game all the way. Georgetown should have won, but a bad pass at the crucial moment helped hurl it down to defeat.

Stydahar in Action.

Big Joe Stydahar, giant center with the Mountaineers, will be on exhibition. Stydahar, allegedly only a football man, has developed into one of the best tap-off men in the conference. Despite his bulk he is nimble, handles the ball well, and usually has little difficulty locating the bucket. He scored 15 points against Georgetown in their first game.

The Hoyas depend on Ed Hargaden to lead them to victory. Hargaden has been traveling like a runaway bobsled in recent games and continues to lead the conference scoring race. Georgetown's play has improved remarkably in the last five games and the Hoyas should take the visitors, barring an upset.

C. U. Figures To Win.

Catholic U. turned back Baltimore without unduly exerting itself in Oriole City last week and figures to win again tonight. Bobby McVean, playing in the absence of Abe Rosenfield whose injured back kept him inactive, topped the Cards in scoring, and very likely Fod Cotton will have him in the line-up again tonight.

Maryland plays V. M. I. tomorrow night at Ritchie Coliseum, while George Washington squares off with Wake Forest in the H street gym.

Waynesboro Winner; Retains League Lead

Waynesboro, Pa., Feb. 11 (Spl.). Waynesboro High School's basket ball team held the Cumberland Valley Athletic League lead by defeating Martinsburg High, 31 to 21.

A Martz, by virtue of his 12 points, took the scoring lead from Shockey, of Martinsburg, who by scoring 7 points is now trailing by 6.

Schmeling Ready; Finishes Training

Leaves Pompton Lakes for Philadelphia Today.

Pompton Lakes, N. J., Feb. 11 (U.P.).—Max Schmeling, of Germany, former heavyweight champion, concluded training today for his scheduled 12-round bout with Steve Hamas, former Penn State grid star, at Convention Hall, Philadelphia, Tuesday night.

Schmeling went through a rough five-round workout with three sparring partners. Lou Baba was forced to stop after one round because of a split lip, resulting from a smashing uppercut. Lou Poster and Pietri Corri were considerably bruised up after two rounds each with Schmeling.

The German will leave for Philadelphia tomorrow.

Duke Five Meets Davidson Tonight

Durham, N. C., Feb. 11 (Spl.). Duke University's Cagers open a crucial week of play in their drive to a fifth straight North Carolina Big Five crown by meeting Davidson in Duke gym tomorrow night. There will be a freshman preliminary between the Kittens and the Imps at 7:15 o'clock, with the varsity tilt scheduled for 8:15.

Davidson was almost too much for the Blue Devils to handle in their first meeting and while the Wildcats have not been showing so well recently against other teams in this section, Cameron's boys have the greatest of respect for them and expect as hard a battle as they have had all season.

The result of the first engagement between the two teams was in Duke's favor 40-35, but only after the Blue Devils had staved off a late Davidson rally. Duke's co-captain triumvirate, Weaver and the Thompson brothers turned in 12 and 10 points respectively to lead the Devils to victory.

Frederick Boys, Girls Score Double-Header

Frederick, Md., Feb. 10 (Spl.).—Frederick High School took both ends of a double-header before a large crowd at the State Armory, the boys nosing out Hagerstown Y. M. C. A., 31 to 30, and the girls defeating Harpers Ferry, W. Va., lassies, 20 to 18.

Keller scored a field goal just before the whistle blew that gave the Frederick boys the victory.

The girls' game was one of the roughest of the season. Twenty-eight fouls were awarded and the lead changed nine times.

Keyser Breaks Jinx, Wins Over La Salle

Keyser, W. Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—George Parrish's Keyser High School basket ball team shook the jinx that has trailed it in games with Cumberland teams this season by administering a 30-to-21 defeat to La Salle Institute.

The game was featured by the clever pass work of the Keyser quintet and the shooting of Lefty Rice and Bishop, who accounted for seven of the winning team's ten field goals. Tommy Stakem and Joe Kelley were La Salle's chief point getters.

Sonja Henie Retains World Skating Title

Oslo, Feb. 11 (AP).—Skating faultlessly to the cheers of an audience of 15,000, including the royal family, Sonja Henie, graceful Norwegian, retained her world figure-skating championship today.

The American star, Maribel Vinson, of Boston, fell during a spin in the free-skating competition, and was placed fifth.

St. Paul's High Wins.

St. Paul, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—St. Paul High School girls' basket ball team, by defeating Norton, 47 to 23, here Frday night, scored their twenty-third consecutive triumph of the season. Mary Austin, with 25 points, led the local scoring.

In the second phase of the double-header engagement, Norton High boys defeated St. Paul, 42 to 25. Davis led the Norton attack with 14 points.

Kingsport High Cops.

Kingsport, Tenn., Feb. 11 (Spl.). Keeping matters well in hand all evening, Kingsport High School's great basket ball team nonchalantly added Tennessee High of Bristol to its victory string Friday night, 29 to 16.

The victory, particularly sweet to Kingsport in light of the fact that it was from an old rival and a Big Five title contender at that, was the twenty-fourth of the last 25 games.

Time Supply Appears Best of 3-Year-Olds Mentioned for Florida Derby

7th Running Draws Best Of Crop

Soon Over, Somebody Also Are Among 50 Nominated.

35 Stables Represented for $10,000 Classic on March 17.

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Fifty 3-year-olds, one of which may train on to win the highest honors of his age, have been nominated for the $10,000 Florida Derby, at a mile and an eighth, that will be run at Hialeah Park on March 17, the closing day of the Miami Jockey Club's meeting.

The band of hopefuls comes from 35 stables, some the leading racing establishments in the country, for the Florida Derby has become something of a prize to win. What with the purse of such classics as the Kentucky Derby, the Preakness and the Classis Stakes, once $50,000 prizes, now worth considerably less than they used to be, a $10,000 race is something to shoot at and the moguls of the American turf are overlooking nothing these days.

On Nominators List.

So, on the list of nominators appear the names of Joseph E. Widener, George D. Widener, C. V. Whitney, the Greentree Stable of Mrs. Payne Whitney, the Wheatley Stable of Mrs. H. C. Phipps and Ogden Mills, the Belair Stud of William Woodward, H. C. Phipps, the Brookmeade Stable of Mrs. Dodge Sloane, S. W. Labrot, Col. E. R. Bradley, Willis Sharpe Kilmer and the Shandon Farms, the Coldstream Stud, Mrs. F. A. Carreaud, the Keeneland Stud, Jack Howard and Hal Price Headley.

This will be the seventh running of the Florida Derby. The inaugural was run at Tampa in 1926 and won by Torcher. In 1929 it became a fixture at Hialeah Park. That year it was won by Upset Lad, and subsequent winners have been Titus, Lighting Bolt, Evening and Charley O.

Soon Over Prominent.

The leading colt on the list is the Greentree Stable's Soon Over, an English-bred son of Buchan and Fleeting Dawn, which has been rated within four pounds of First Minstrel by Handicapper W. S. Vosburgh. Soon Over started 16 times and won five races. Other Greentree Stable candidates are Nights End, a son of Bunting, and The Triumvir, which cost $14,500 and was the highest priced yearling of 1931.

At the moment Mrs. F. A. Carreaud's Time Supply, the impressive winner of the Hialeah Stakes, has the public eye, but several other interesting possibilities have shown at the meeting already.

Somebody Mentioned.

Among these are Joseph E. Widener's Somebody; the Belair Stud's Zulu Lad, a black colt by Zev and Nedana. Mrs. C. S. Bromley recently purchased Chance Flight to have her colors up in the race.

Then there are Jack Low, G. D. Widener's candidate, which is a full brother to the famous Jack Higo. Willis Sharpe Kilmer's Sun Abbot, a son of Sun Briar; the Keeneland Stud's Disaster, which is a half brother to Jean Lafitte; the Brookmeade Stable's Time Clock; W. Graham's Coequel, which set a record of 1:10 1-5 for 6 furlongs at Hialeah Park; Col. Bradley's Boy Valet, a son of Black Servant, sire of Blue Larkspur; the Wheatley Stable's Propagandist, by Chatterton, sire of Faireno, the champion 3-year-old of 1932, and Treadhaven, a full sister to the good mare Tred Avon.

America's champion mayor is Capt. Harry Wooding, veteran of the Civil War and Mayor of Danville, Va., for 41 years. He will be 90 years old in a few weeks. Captain Wooding was born within a mile of Danville and has lived there all his life with the exception of four years while he was in the army. He began his first term as mayor in 1892, 42 years ago next August.

His fellow townspeople have returned him to office 14 times and with such certainty that it has long since become useless to run against him.

The Pony Express, which was established in the spring of 1860 and continued until the fall of the following year, has won its place as one of the most romantic institutions of the old West. Its record for delivery of the mail in the face of hostile Indians, great distances, and other obstacles, is unsurpassed—for only one mail was lost in all its runs.

The horses, of which 400 to 500 were kept on hand for the fast, short runs, learned their routes so well that on one occasion when the rider was taken by Indians, the horse finished his run riderless, delivering the mailpouch intact at the next station.

Dear Al: Hialeah Race Track, Feb. 10.

Friends, Romans and horse players, lend me your eyes. I knew we would run down Bright Beauty. Yesterday she ran the race I knew she had in her system and that $22 mutuel was a welcome relief. We also had Miney Myerson and lost another by a nose. If the Maryland tracks can match step with Florida this is going to be a bang-up year all around the circuit. The handle in the totalisator yesterday was $328,682. Attendance, betting and revenue to the State are up more than 25 per cent over 1933. Followers of Earl Porter have taken a cleaning since he returned after being set down. The ace boy has ridden one winner in his last 15 and is tied for the meeting with Coucci at 13 winners. The mile and a sixteenth on the turf course was remeasured yesterday and found to be short. Rained all last night and indications are that the track will be slow tomorrow.

BILL.

First Race—Cabouse did not relish that mile in his last outing. Sprints 6 furlongs tomorrow and appears suited. A tough race, but I believe the top one has the best chance. Texas Tommy showed a world of speed last week and may make Cabouse step. Escadron may prove a surprise.

Second Race—I'm going to try to sneak Blackbirder over on the boys. The slow track should help this son of Bostonian. Coucci will ride and we will get a price, I do believe. Hilise and Idle Victory to take care of the others.

Third Race—Scoutmaster gets the Bennings call in this mile and an eighth. I'm a trifle too heavy to ride this son of Campfire. However, if Coucci will allow him to find his own stride, I expect Scoutmaster to pass them all in the final half. He was tightened in that last sprint. The off track helps both Racoon and Primute.

Fourth Race—Beoff, daughter of Black Toney, will appreciate the going and will have the hustling Meade aboard. A rather slow breaker, she gets an outside post and should escape interference. Lady Reigh is promising and may take second money. Lofty Lady for the rest.

Fifth Race—Cash Surrender, one that turned us around last week, appears suited by conditions in this mile. The off track moves Paich Pocket into a contending position Nights End for the minor award.

Sixth Race—Little Corporal gets in this with 101 pounds, must overcome a rail position, but seems capable of getting home 1 nfront of these. Clocker Mike has given his stamp of approval. Flying Gypsy and Try Fair for the place and show.

Seventh Race—We find a group of improving platers matched in the final. Personally, I lean to Brass Monkey. The veteran has run two good races out of three and appears ripe for a real crack down tomorrow. Kneehigh is another on the mend. Fairly Wild is hard to guess.

Walker Cup Players To Use U.S.G.A. Ball

New York, Feb. 11 (AP).—Herbert Jaques, president of the United States Golf Association, announced today that the American Walker Cup team will use the standard U. S. G. A. golf ball in the international matches against the British Walker Cup team at St. Andrews, Scotland, May 11 and 12.

Francis Ouimet, captain of the American team, was consulted and expressed his complete confidence in the performance of this ball under all weather and course conditions.

The American standard ball is larger than the British ball. Its diameter is 1.68 inches and weight 1.62 ounces. The British ball is the same weight, but measures 1.62 in diameter.

Virginia Faces Busy Week in Sports

Boxing, Track, Swimming and Basket Ball Are on Program.

UNIVERSITY, VA., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Virginia's most active week of the indoor sports season is just ahead. Cavalier varsity and first year teams in basket ball, boxing, track and swimming will all be in competition from tomorrow through Saturday.

The busy period begins tomorrow afternoon when the court quintet from Staunton Military Academy comes to play the Virginia first year basketers. It comes to a grand climax when Yale's boxers face the Cavalier varsity Saturday night in Richmond.

Track Teams Vie.

The track teams start their indoor season with a big show here Wednesday night. A triangular meet has been arranged with Washington and Lee and the Virginia Military Institute, and events have been listed for both varsity and freshmen.

Two State rivals have been scheduled for the varsity basket ball team. Gus Tebell's charges play Hampden-Sydney College here on Tuesday night and on Friday they have a Southern conference game against North Carolina State.

Frosh Boxers Away.

Petersburg High School's boxers, coached by Douglas Myers, former middleweight champion of the conference when he competed in Virginia uniform, are scheduled to close the '34 season for Virginia's first year boxers. This match takes place in Petersburg Friday.

Saturday finds no Virginia teams competing at home. Not only are the boxers away, but the swimming teams, both the varsity and the first-year men, will travel to Williamsburg for a tank encounter with William and Mary.

Yale will be boxed for the first time since 1932 when the Virginians ended the season by taking the Elis for a 6 to 1 count. It also will be Virginia's first ring match in Richmond.

Maryland Five Runner-Up In Dixie Conference Race

North Carolina University Pace-Setter With Staters, Duke and South Carolina Seen as Threats; Virginia Better Than Rated.

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 11 (AP).—Victorious over N. C. State by an overwhelming margin, North Carolina's White Phantoms, still leading the Southern Conference basket ball procession, today watched Duke's Blue Devils move up into a threatening position.

Carolina's victory over State last night was no surprise but the score, 45-24, was more convincing than the most optimistic Tarheel had expected.

State's Wolfpack, which previously conquered the Phantoms in a spectacular uphill battle, had no second half spurt in reserve at Chapel Hill. With Stuart Aitken and Vergil Weathers showing the way, the Tarheels ran up a 26-16 margin at the intermission and continued the barrage in the closing period.

Two for Gamecocks This Week.

South Carolina's Gamecacks, victorious over Clemson in their only start and technically at the head of the list, will renew their belated campaigning in a pair of battles with Clemson at Columbia Friday and Saturday.

With the turn of the week, the Gamecocks will cross over into North Carolina in an effort to earn more than a technical right to the leadership in contests with State, Duke and Carolina.

Meanwhile on their more impressive record, the Phantoms enjoyed the leader's laurels with Maryland's fast faltering Old Liners following and with Duke's impressive team fast on their trail.

Maryland had a tough time whipping Virginia, 28 to 25, to keep its place in the sun, but Duke found three other Old Dominion teams much easier. On successive nights the Devils earned convincing victories, turning back Washington and Lee, Virginia Military and V. P. I.

Washington and Lee's Generals, who lost to Duke but whipped Virginia Tech, enjoyed whatever honors were attached to the leadership of the second division with V. M. I., V. P. I., Clemson and Virginia following in order.

Virginia Finds Going Rough.

Virginia's Cavaliers, the most deserving candidate for the consolation prize, showed a record of eight defeats in as many conference games, but the statistics failed to tell the story of the magnificent battles the Cavaliers have put up against superior foes.

State's Wolfpack, trying to push itself upward, will move northward this week to play Virginia Tech Tuesday at Blacksburg, Washington and Lee Thursday at Lexington, and Virginia at Charlottesville Friday.

Meanwhile, North Carolina will face another crucial test with Duke's Devils at Durham Friday.

Other games on the program will pit V. P. I. against Washington and Lee at Blacksburg tomorrow night, Maryland against V. M. I. at College Park Tuesday, South Carolina against Clemson in a pair of battles at Columbia Friday and Saturday, and V. P. I. against V. M. I. at Lexington Saturday.

The standings of Southern Conference teams follow:

Charles Town High Wins Double-Header

Charles Town, W. Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Held by close guarding to a 7-6 lead in the first half, Charles Town High School's basket ball team found itself in the last two quarters to score a decisive 35-14 victory over Hancock High School.

In a preliminary game, a last-quarter rally by the Hancock girls' team fell short at the crucial moment and the Charles Town sextet won, 35-26, to make a clean sweep for the home teams.

Eight Indoor Contests on Gobblers' Schedule This Week.

BLACKSBURG, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—Teams of institutions that were known as arch-rivals in sport at Virginia Tech before the Dads of many present day cadets ever entered college will be met in eight indoor contests this week. Every Tech team except the freshmen boxers will be in action during a busy six-day grind.

Washington and Lee, V. M. I. and North Carolina State are the foes. Pitted against rivals

Grain Traders Point to Sag In Speculating

Lack of Buying Laid to Fear Argentina Wheat Will Compete.

Chicago, Feb. 11 (AP).—By a curious coincidence, proposed measures to reduce speculation in securities find grain traders complaining not of excess but persistent absence of adequate speculative business.

Just at present, any effort to diminish speculative dealings in wheat or other cereals, traders say, would apparently be as superfluous almost as a Shakespeare plan to paint the lily or to try regilding of gold.

The chief reason given for public apathy regarding wheat is fear expressed of late that in case of a good advance of prices here, grain from the southern hemisphere might start to come to this country despite the existing import duty of 42 cents a bushel.

Wheat Eases Slightly.

Largely as a result of inactivity of buyers, wheat yesterday morning, compared to one week back, showed ⅞ to 1⅜ cents a bushel loss, with corn ⅝ to 1⅛ down, and oats ⅞ to 1¼ off, but provisions up 20 to 25 cents.

Likelihood of wheat coming to this country from Argentina is not regarded as an idle threat any more than rye imports under way now from Poland. It is pointed out that Buenos Aires May delivery of wheat has sold in the past week around 40 cents under Chicago prices, and that the grain can be shipped to the United States Atlantic seaboard for 12 to 15 cents a bushel.

This is within a few cents of what Western hard winter domestic wheat could be shipped all rail from Chicago.

Argentine Cost Problem.

It would be necessary to add the cost of shipping Argentine wheat from the United States seaboard to interior domestic mills before a correct comparison between imported grain and the domestic would be possible. Leading trade authorities say, however, that the sight of the American price level so close to only the duty checking a flood of grain into this country has tended to chill buyers' enthusiasm.

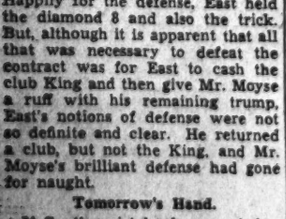
A Brilliant Play Goes Wrong.

Many Bridge players bemoan their tough luck. They like to recite how everything bad happens to them, how their finesses lose and how, when everythings seems to be right, an opponent will show up with a blank suit, secure a ruff with possibly a singleton trump and thereby defeat an otherwise ironclad contract.

The latest and to me the most affecting story of tough luck is that told of Mr. Alphonse Moyse, jr., of New York, who held the West hand pictured below in a recent rubber game.

North, Dealer.
East and West vulnerable.



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1♣	1NT	2♡	Pass
2♠	2NT	Dbl.	Pass
3♣	3◇	4♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

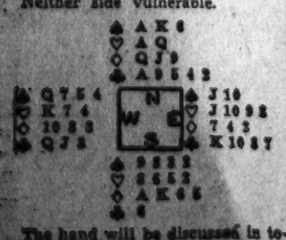
The bidding is both interesting and daring. As a matter of fact, Mr. Moyse could have made two no-trump doubled, but South was unwilling to leave that contract in and North then, quite correctly, went after game.

Mr. Moyse, in the lead against the contract of four spades, made the brilliant Opening lead of the three of clubs, knowing that he must be again in the lead on the first round of trumps and hoping that the cards in the Dummy would disclose some method of putting East in the lead and perhaps defeating the contract. This trick was won with the Ace in Dummy and a small spade led, which Mr. Moyse won with the Ace; and now, without an instant's hesitation, he led the three of diamonds, knowing that he could put his partner in the lead only if the latter held the diamond 8. True enough, there were 2 chances to 1 that this would cost an overtrick, but it was, as Mr. Moyse could see, also the only chance to defeat the contract. Happily for the defense, East held the diamond 8 and also the trick. But, although it is apparent that all that was necessary to defeat the contract was for East to cash the club King and then give Mr. Moyse a ruff with his remaining trump, East's notions of defense were not so definite and clear. He returned a club, but not the King, and Mr. Moyse's brilliant defense had gone for naught.

Tomorrow's Hand.

If South, mistakenly or not, has reached a contract of six diamonds, what line of play gives him the best opportunity to reach his contract?

North, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.



The hand will be discussed in tomorrows' article.

Rally of Security Prices Last Hour Saturday Morning Indicated Many Believe Deflationary Effects of New Bill May Be More Than Offset.

By Ralph West Robey.

By Ralph West Robey.

To a vast number of people the aspect of the pending security exchange bill that is of most immediate interest is the effect it will have on stock prices. In no small degree, too, this result probably will determine the amount of public support that the measure gets. If the market continues to go up—it has advanced on balance over 20 per cent in the last two months—there will be little demand for extensive modification in the bill, except from the stock exchange members themselves. On the other hand, if we run into a declining market, and especially a declining market in the face of improving business conditions, hundreds of thousands of investors and speculators throughout the country will turn against the measure.

As yet, of course, there has been no adequate basis for judging which effect the bill will have. When the first rumors of it reached Wall street Friday afternoon just before the market closed, there was a sharp sell-off. On Saturday morning, too, the liquidation continued in heavy volume for about an hour with the result that the market as a whole showed substantial losses. Starting about 11 o'clock Saturday morning, however, the market turned and regained an appreciable amount of the ground it had lost in the first hour.

This First Evidence Is Far From Conclusive.

This bit of early record, nevertheless, is far from conclusive. In the first place, one must recognize that it has been only a matter of two or three weeks since the Street was assured by its Washington sources that there would be no regulation of the stock exchange by this session of Congress. The explanation given was that at present President Roosevelt is more interested in "recovery" than in "reform" and consequently would do nothing to stop a rising security market. This was not taken to mean that he would countenance a runaway bull market, such as last summer, but it was felt that so long as the advance remained orderly there no longer was much reason to fear drastic regulation.

About a week ago, however, the picture changed and there began to be reports that some regulation would be imposed by this Congress. It still was believed, nevertheless, that it would not be severe and that there was no occasion to fear anything which would cause a break of prices.

Trading went ahead with a good bit of confidence, accordingly, and almost everyone in the Street was anticipating a "good" market for many weeks to come.

Then out of a clear sky came the bill as it was introduced in Congress Saturday morning. Necessarily it was a shock. It not only was more stringent than currently had been anticipated, but was more stringent than ever had been expected.

Bill Published At About Worst Possible Time.

On the top of this was the fact that this dash of cold water came at about the worst possible time from the point of view of the market—a Saturday morning before a holiday when even under the best of circumstances there is a tendency for weakness. Further, along with it was the rather shocking news of the cancellation of all Government air-mail contracts, which by itself would have softened the market through liquidation in aviation stocks.

The sharp drop in the first hour on Saturday morning, therefore, was assured by a variety of reasons and in itself did not furnish much evidence on the future trend of the market. Much more significant for this latter purpose was the rally in the second hour. This indicated that on further thought many traders became convinced that the bill need not result in a bear market, at least for some time.

This does not mean, it should be emphasized, that the street concluded the bill wolud not be deflationary and consequently something to be fought. Rather, it means simply that many in the street believe that this effect of the measure will be more than offset by other forces. It is needless to add, of course, that such a conclusion is not a significant guarantee that securtiy prices will rise.

Overbought Stock Market Hit Slightly as Regulation Looms

Speculative Readjustments Bring Sharpest Reactions; Some Quarters Welcome Government Supervision of Exchanges to Halt Abuses in Trading.

New York, Feb 11 (AP).—An overbought stock market—and one that is headed for Government regulation—did some backfiring this week.

Speculative readjustments brought the sharpest reactions since autumn as traders accepted profits accruing from the December-January rally and hustled out of "positions" in advance of the Federal control proposals.

That a setback had finally come caused little surprise; in fact, not a few quarters welcomed it, remembering, no doubt, last summer's excesses and the ensuing let-down.

Trading Community Surprised.

The trading community seemed a bit surprised by the President's decision to recommend market regulation at this time, since it had been inferred that this part of the "New Deal" might not be brought to the attention of the present congress.

Government supervision in the interests of removing abuses has loomed for some time; its imminence now finds the security markets with a busting advance to their recent record.

Dollar exchange, possibly with the aid of pressure from the new equalization fund, declined throughout virtually the entire week, reducing its premium over gold currencies which made for greater normality in view of its lower gold content.

The French franc was strong throughout most of the crisis in Paris, reflecting partly the further sale of dollars. The French currency came nearer its new parity, although the difference was still large enough to attract more gold here.

The business background of the markets continued to show the progress, which has been its reassuring characteristic since the first of this year.

Business News Favorable.

Comparisons with 1933, when trade was feeling and looking particularly blue, are in many instances striking; this is especially true of retail business which by comparison with a year ago is almost enjoying a boom.

Statistical agencies note a difference between current buying of staples and merchandise and that of last summer. Forward purchases by consumers desiring protection against price increases, says Dun & Bradstreet, have "not reached a total of any consequence as the covering of actusl needs, many of which have been long deferred, appears to be ths policy for the present."

Commitments for Goods.

The upturn of several months ago, it is recalled, was accompanied by heavy commitments from producers of goods who sought to guard themselves against the inflation which was then generally expected.

Steel, electric power, building permits, freight loadings, commercial failures, the dividend record, bank clearings and other indices that chart "the times" have given strength to sentiment, however far the stock market may have gone in exploiting the improvement.

If regulation causes some speculative tremors, conservative circles point out that over the long term the real basis of security values is earnings and that many companies have turned losses into profits.

Zinc Advances $2 Per Ton; Copper, Quiet

Tin Prices Firm 1 Cent; Lead Is Steady; Steel Demand Grows.

New York, Feb. 11 (AP).—An advance of $2 per ton in zinc this week featured quiet but steady nonferrous metal markets. Unofficial reports of drastic curtailment in mine operations and an advance in ore prices caused smelters to advance metal quotations, but consumer buying was moderate.

Recent larger purchases are said to have placed sellers in a more favorable position and the outlook for expanding galvanizing operations was causing expectations of renewed demand.

Quieter conditions toward the close reflected an unfavorable view of January statistics and a disposition to await announcement of ore prices and mine output for the week.

Quiet Copper Market.

Continued delays in drafting a copper code satisfactory to various interests was reflected by a quiet domestic copper market with the price largely nominal at the 8-cent basis.

Expansion in automobile production caused hopefulness for future improvement, but had no immediate influence. A fair export demand was reported at steady prices.

An advance of about 1 cent per pound in tin prices reflected steadiness of foreign exchanges, but business was on a small day-to-day basis. Consumers generally were said to be awaiting renewal of buying by tin plate manufacturers whose operations are slowly expanding. Some large plants were reported to have increased production this week.

Lead Holds Steady.

Lead held steady and unchanged, with business of moderate proportions. Smelters were not pressing in view of an expected renewal of consumer demand to fill February and March requirements as well as because of indications of increasing industrial needs for the metal.

Antimony remained dull and prices nominal.

More active specifications for sheets and strips from the automobile industry accounted largely for increasing steel mill operations.

Railroad equipment buying also aided, although orders for heavier products have not yet reached mills, consequently plant operations in various sections were irregular. Structural awards were moderate. No price changes were reported. A moderate gain in pig iron buying developed at steady prices.

Cotton Prices Gain Steadily During Week

Trading Is Active as New Highs Are Made; May Closes at 12.34.

New York, Feb. 11 (AP).—The cotton market has shown increased activity and strength during the past week with prices making new high records for the season during today's trading, when May contracts sold at 12.36 or 328 points above the low level of last August.

The buying, which came from both trade and commission house sources, was influenced by favorable reports from the textile trade, indications of a steadily tightening spot situation in the South, and was later stimulated by prospects for early action proposed crop control legislation in Washington.

The advance met heavy realizing above the 12-cent level, but while reactionary sentiment was more in evidence today, May closed at 12.34, or within 2 points of the high for the movement and about 73 points above the closing quotation of the previous week.

Trade buying for both foreign and domestic account has been one of the more prominent trading features of the week.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY Pity This Landlord By Harry J. Tuthill

JO! OH JO! OH THERE YOU ARE. MY WORD! SITTING HERE IN THE DARK.
GEORGE, THAT NICE WOMAN NEXTDOOR IS GONE. MOVED. FORCED TO LEAVE HERE BY THE BULLYING TACTICS OF THAT INSIPID LANDLORD.
AHEM! WELL ANYHOW, I'LL TURN ON THE LIGHTS.
HE WAS HERE WHILE I HELPED HER ARGUE WITH THE MOVING MEN, STRUTTING THROUGH THE HALL AND SNEERING WHEN WE TOLD HIM HE WAS TO BLAME FOR EVERYTHING.
I'LL ADMIT HE'S GUILTY OF TRYING TO GET YOU TWO LADIES TO BE FRIENDS, BUT....
OH GEORGE I HEARD ENOUGH OF THAT SORT OF DIPPY TALK FROM HIM TODAY WHEN HE TOLD EVERYBODY, EVEN THE MOVING MEN, HOW UTTERLY BIG-HEARTED HE IS.
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. 2-12.
LISTEN JO, YOU'LL ADMIT HE KNEW NOTHING ABOUT THAT DAY-IN-THE LAUNDRY MIX-UP UNTIL SHE CALLED HIM UP AND....
HE BELLOWED ALL THAT OVER AND OVER AGAIN TOO, WHILE HE SWAGGERED AROUND WAVING A ROLL OF MONEY OFFERING TO BET 10 OR 20 TO 1 THAT HE WAS A PERFECT LANDLORD. HIM!

JOE JINKS, Featuring Dynamite Dunn Pete Knows! By Llanuza

JOE'S IDEA FOR MAKING DYNAMITE'S COME-BACK FIGHT A NATIONAL SENSATION WAS CLEAR ENOUGH TO JOE... BUT NOT TO PETE-HUMUS .... SO JOE EXPLAINS IT TO HIM
HERE'S THE PROPOSITION! DYNAMITE'S GONNA FIGHT FIVE MEN.... ONE AFTER ANOTHER ....PUT 'EM ALL AWAY IN A TOTAL OF FIVE MINUTES.... NO TIME OUT BETWEEN SCRAPS.... AN' ANY GUY THAT STAYS MORE'N A MINUTE GETS $500!
IT'S A SWELL IDEA, JOE.... BUT I BETCHA HAVE TROUBLE GETTIN' FIVE GUYS TO TAKE THE CHANCE!
CHANCE?... WHAT CHANCE ARE THEY TAKIN'?... IF THEY STAY LONGER'N A MINUTE, THEY GET HALF A GRAND.... IF THEY DON'T.... WELL THEY GOT NOTHIN' TO LOSE!
WHY SURE THEY HAVE, JOE!
OH, YEAH?... AN WHAT HAVE THEY GOT TO LOSE?
WELL... THEY GOT TEETH, AIN'T THEY?

Walt Mason, Himself

Another Blessing.

There always is some blessing, to comfort and console, when times are most distressing, and one is in the hole. There is some benediction to soothe him and sustain, when wearied by life's friction, by all its stress and strain. There is a balm to heal us and warm our frozen feet, when mortal ills congeal us, and fortune's far from sweet. In pleasant bygone seasons when I had coin galore, I thought I had good reasons to snort around and roar. "My indignation waxes," I told the folks at home; I talked of income taxes wherever I might roam. I said, "I see quite clearly I'm robbed by Uncle Sam; I have to dig up yearly the price of Hoover Dam. I have to toil like thunder, the smackers to secure, then Uncle takes the plunder and leaves me strapped and poor. I well could spare the money that Uncle Sam desired, but thought it rather funny to raise a row all-fired. And so I kept complaining of loads that I must bear, that tax my soul was paining, it filled my life with care. And all my stall-fed neighbors were in a kindred jam; the profits from their labors must go to Uncle Sam. This year I'm feeling cheerful, I let my nerves relax, I am no longer fearful, I'll pay no income tax. Until things are adjusted I'll have no yellowbacks; how pleasant to be busted and pay no income tax!

WINNIE WINKLE, the Breadwinner Disguised

FOR THE LAST TIME, JEAN, IF YOU VALUE YOUR LIFE - LAY OFF THIS BOOK! IF YOU PERSIST IN WRITING THIS EXPOSE OF THE UNDERWORLD, I PREDICT YOU WON'T BE ALIVE FORTY-EIGHT HOURS FROM NOW.
THANKS FOR THE LUNCH AND THE WARNING, DICK, BUT I THINK YOU'RE UNDULY ALARMED.. LITTLE JEAN CAN TAKE CARE OF HERSELF.
STEPPING INTO A TELEPHONE BOOTH FOR PRIVACY - SHE HASTILY OPENS HER PURSE..
I'LL JUST MAKE SURE THIS LITTLE PEARL-HANDLED BODY-GUARD OF MINE IS IN PROPER WORKING ORDER AND WELL-LOADED.
BUT WHILE JEAN PENFIELD EXAMINES HER GUN-A FAMILIAR FIGURE STEPS BRISKLY UP AND ENTERS THE ADJOINING PHONE BOOTH..
IT'S LAWYER SPALDONI! I WONDER WHO HE'S GOING TO CALL?
OUR WINNIE HAS BEEN CALLED TO THE LOCAL HEADQUARTERS OF THE SECRET SERVICE, WHERE THE CHIEF, CAP'T. POWERS (MR. NAROUSHE) OFFERED HER A POSITION AS A SECRET SERVICE OPERATINE.
GOSH, I NEVER NOTICED HOW GOOD-LOOKING HE WAS WHEN HE WAS MR. NAROUSHE IN OUR OFFICE! MAYBE IT'S HIS UNIFORM!
SILENT THOUGHT
THUMP THUMP
NOW, MISS WINKLE-ER-YOU'RE GOING TO HAVE TO-ER- CHANGE YOUR NAME - OHHHHH-HHH CAPTAIN POWERS -ER-UH - THIS IS A LITTLE-ER-SUDDEN!
IN THE SECRET SERVICE YOU CANNOT BE KNOWN AS MISS WINNIE WINKLE -
YOU WILL BE KNOWN AS W. 13 !!
OH!
